Well, it will be a stupid thing to do so, since Chancellor Lotvall has no yacht, and it is not really that hard to afford a yacht in the Aquaria. However, if someone really do it, then it will be treated as the crime of stealing, and enough to sentence you to 3 months imprisonment. Oh, for the "declaring independence" part? We are treating this as a joke.

A fail attempt to hijack a plane and order it to crash into somewhere important.

(Sorry if this make you feel uncomfortable.)

Re: Converting shed into gas-chamber.

Not a crime as long as it is self-contained and used for lawful purposes (vermin and pests -- not humans, livestock, or other people's pets).

The crime is in using it criminally.

Examples:

>>>Homicide -- death penalty (and shed is destroyed)

>>>Illegal death of livestock or pet -- 1 year hard labor per incident that can be served concurrently, fined 5 x cost of animals 3/5 which goes to aggrieved parties). And shed is destroyed.

>>>Creating a nuisance (the gas leaks out making neighbors sick. Fined 5x cost of medical treatment, destruction of shed).

Depends on the location. If the forest fire is started on Uingffh (Kaywell's homeworld and sacred capital), the act would be considered a crime against Kelios (God) and punished with 20,000 lashes from zeruel strips followed by execution, though it should be noted that most people end up dying during the 20,000 lashes. If the forest fire is started on some other planet and on private property, one can expect a 1.5 million imperial ster fine and/or 45 years in a prison/re-education camp. If the forest fire is started on any non-private location and outside of Uingffh, there would be no punishment; in fact, it would be encouraged to make way for Kaywellian factories, settlements, cities, etc.

That would count as high level domestic terrorism (We have a fully colonized mars with many cities on it) so this would lead to the death penalty.

Juansonian law prohibits use of the death penalty in any circumstance, so anyone involved in an execution would just be tried for murder.

Using deadly force against police officers unlawfully forcing their way into your home?

This was made a federal issue due to a constitutional right to protect one's self, family, and property from threats to life and property. The higher courts and National Assembly all came to the agreement of both forbidding "no-knock raids" (other than in very, VERY specific contexts, such as terror activity and whatnot), as well as defending actions of citizens to defend themselves from police that have not made themselves known, and have no right to be present, as long as the level of force used by the police matched an equal or elevated response from the citizen (ex. you're allowed to shoot a police officer that barged into your home and pointed a taser at you without a sufficient warrant, but not one that is waiting at your door for you to answer the door).

Accidentally unearthing a lone, unmarked, poorly constructed burial, then doing a short tap dance on the human remains.

simple assault (misdemeanor -- no battery, not aggravated), intimidation such that a reasonable person fears for his person or his family's safety, life or limb.
-- anything from a judicial warning to 6 months in a local jail conscripted to manual labor (usually picking up trash).
More often than not if the person has a history of being obnoxious in public, judges have sentenced perps to wearing a sandwich board in public for up to 30 days. The board will read something to the effect of: "I intimidated another human like I was a bully(spoiled child/arrogant narcissistic creep, etc.,) therefore I must wear this for X more days.

simple assault, organized and/or intentional (felony -- no battery, not aggravated) a campaign against another person or other people such that a reasonable person reasonably fears for his safety, or life and limb.

-- up to 6 months to 5 years hard labor, plus fined 5X cost of damages (for example if a venue is shut down, 5X the entire cost of running that venue for the intended length of that activity). Usually 1 week to one month of hard labor for a 1st time offender (such as an overeducated yet still naïve college student will delusions of grandeur) will assuage the perp from further hate and malice.
