While forum 7 is just for bullshitting, that does not mean it is for posting actual bullshit. These threads have a theme, you might consider actually keeping to them.

That is to say: Yes, you DO need to explain.

Hatsunia: While the actual 'Sky Mile Tower' is a proposed experimental construction project, Hatsunia actually went and built it. I'm not entirely sure whether it is intended to function as a business building or some kind of arcology. I could honestly see both.

In a highly politicized fictional story, Tohorin fights a state -likely- meant to be Japan and even though they outnumber the invading enemy 20 to one, they lose 65 soldiers to every enemy killed. They do still win though, because the enemy's invasion force is like, 50,000 and the Tohorin aren't an African tribe at the time of the Scramble for Africa.

They are in possession of an ungodly amount of military aviation, even for a PMT(?) nation totaling at 32,000. That's about 2.5 times as much as the USAF currently but I guess there's a lot of land to work with, that probably also explains the relatively low number of carriers (or potentially just aviation cruisers because yknow, Russia).

Most people go mad when they try to communicate with or control the Giant Space Wyrms. Almira, a Blood Elf of the Crazz Empire, was the first to successfully communicate with it. development of the system thousands of times faster. Scientists rushed to explore the system, while others got rich off of their endeavors. People started moving into the system. Almira's family wanted to live on Aiur itself, but they were killed by sentient lightning storms when they tried to land.

Hatsunia holds many ideals that even nations in western Europe might consider 'radically' progressive. While much of this can be placed on an actual unironic time-traveling musician (Yeah... that's pretty wacky. Not the bad kind though, I love it), more still can be placed on an obsession with technological progression. Neither of which seem to have any downsides (excluding the eventual AI revolt that will wipe out most if not all of humanity), making Hatsunia one of the more pleasant places to live. (I also didn't know of half of the bad stuff about Japan listed in the factbook, such as transgender sterilization.)

It's interesting to see a Japan that is radically different from the OTL that isn't just Commie/Socialist/Imperial Japanaboo, tbh.

They tend to venerate the founding fathers of the United States as gods. One of their subsets involves the veneration of Roosevelt as a God of Strength, though little indication is given to which one. I can only guess based on context that they mean Teddy.

The country consists of what would basically what would be the Florida Panhandle in our timeline. To the southeast is the rest of Florida, which is part of the Republic of Cuba, and the rest of the border (that is not on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico) is surrounded by the Dominion of Georgia, part of British North America.

While Hatsunia is based on Japan, there is a major difference between the two in terms of overall outlook. Japan is stated as advancing progressive policies in such a way that they still retain a connection to the traditions of the past, while Hatsunia has functionally gone into full-throated progressive overdrive. I'm not exactly clear on how this relates to certain stylistic choices, but I get the impression that they approach the idea of advancing knowledge and technology with an almost fanatical zeal...

I HOPE I read that section right...
