Voluntary Manslaughter here is defined as killing someone without the intent of killing (for example you beat up someone in order to rob him or during a brawl, you dont want to kill but the victim actually die).

If convicted the penalty is from 7 to 20 years in prison, depending on the circumstances, always without parole.

Whats the penalty for desertion (both during war and peace)?

Officially, during times of peace the penalty is 1 to 5 years, however, for decades this penalty has been exchanged for payment of a fine of half the minimum wage.

In times of war, desertion means death or life imprisonment, depending on what followed the individual's desertion.

Stealing military equipment is bad enough, but crashing them... Stealing equipment of significant importance to the Khoa Dien government can land you in prison for a variety of crimes, damage to public property and grand theft being one of them. Anyone killed in the incident would add a charge of murder per victim, and even one guilty count is punishable with life imprisonment - which is typically a sentence of up to 30 years.

Be glad it's unlikely for you to be tried under military law (unless you're a member of the Worker's and Peasant's Liberation Army) in which case you may be cooked - military law is one of the few segments of Khoa Dien law that still enforces the death penalty for high crimes against the state, and this would certainly count as one of them.

If you stole them on behalf of a foreign government, that's even worse. Even under civilian law, your days would be numbered.

Not showing up to scheduled court trial (civil and/or criminal cases)?

You get locked up in jail for the duration of the trial, unless you have a good excuse for missing court and it better be a very good one.

Unlicensed food trucking is punishable on its own with a fine equivalent of the price of a food trucking license ($250) and the amount of money made from the food sold.

The latter part of the crime is non actionable, however, but the property owner can sue the criminal for reasons such as illegal advertising for example.

Assassinating a person who's controversial in another country.

Historically, the maximum punishment for murder (along with other serious crimes such as treason, rape, torture, etc.) was death; however, under the Comprehensive Legal Reform Law regarding the Punishment of Civilian Criminals passed in the 1980s, capital punishment was abolished as a punishment for crime under civilian law.

Nowadays, the maximum punishment for murder is life imprisonment, which is normally a sentence of up to 30 years. The sentence may be altered (i.e. lengthened or shortened) in accordance with the law.

Depends on who the trouble is directed at. No punishment at all unless it opposes the government in any way, in which case the punishment could be torture, execution, and/or unexplained disappearance.

Not possible, as murderers are given the death penalty if they are found guilty. If he was an actual murderer and was found not guilty and released, then that would still just be murder, punishable by death.

Under Khoa Dien law, manslaughter 𐄂𐄂 carries a less harsh sentence than murder 𐄂𐄂, but is still considered a rather serious crime. It is defined as the unintentional taking of a life due to undue negligence. There is no distinction between voluntary or involuntary manslaughter; what would generally be considered voluntary manslaughter in some systems is considered murder in Khoa Dien Dao. A citizen convicted of manslaughter will be sentenced to a minimum of 10 years in prison depending on the circumstances such as the scale of the manslaughter or the nature of the negligence.

B&E with no apparent criminal intent is up to six months probation with limited rights, and fined up to three months wages at the discretion of the judge. B&E with criminal intent is 6 months to a year probation with limited rights, and fined 3 months wages.

Driving around in a repurposed firetruck with some friends (very rich friends i guess) and hosing hot (not scalding hot) maple syrup as full as possible at any cars at the same intersection driving with its top down or windows open?

This is a pretty absurd situation, but ok, let's go...

1 - Having a repurposed police car or a fire truck is not a problem, as long as you do not use official logos and/or attempt to pretend to be a member of the force.

2 - Throwing anything at others, whether jets of water or maple syrup, is considered unjustified physical aggression; Which, depending on the severity of the injury,, can be between 6 months and 3 years in prison. Considering that maple syrup is hot, even if not scalding, it can still severely hurt a person.

3 - Even if it doesn't hit the driver and only hits the vehicle, it still amounts to damage to private property and even vandalism, which could earn you another 5 years in prison.

4 - If the vehicle being hit is a government vehicle, the situation is even worse, damage to public property can earn you an additional 8 years in prison.

Enter a public building and simply starting to change any light bulbs you find on the way for new ones?
