"That's why we have armed population, some no asshole with personality cult would manage to purge us. Not without fierce resistance... oh sure, there is an argument about guns inferiority against tanks and jet fighters. Edgar's regime, our former government and the intervention forces used tanks and jets against the people, and that's how our people ended up with lots of military hardware, ha! We also have distaste towards theocracies, due to our former regime being christian theocracy. Hell dudes, it took our society lots of collective willpower to admit, that Christians are not our enemies, never have been, and that Edgar's regime perverted this religion's core principals and created its own heresy.

Either way, if this genocidal dictator will ever try to forcibly convert us or genocide, we gonna shoot to kill. This leader is not someone we approve due to his crimes." -Shawn Bjornson

"You seem a tactless brute, Borzywoj. Yet worse than this I see in you not a leader of men but a liar, plain as day. Must you expect us to believe your sob story of a childhood, or the bumbling villainy of those you fight? Do you really believe that we'll look at your 'faith' and 'conversion', if you can call it that, and see it as anything but the acting-out of a child desperate to spite his parents? You must not. You are the simplest sort of scum- traitor to those who inexplicably care for you, and deceiver of those stupid enough to be taken in by your daft lies. Now leave me. I presume you've more important things to do. Your daughters need to be shipped off to the brothels again, I assume. Do remember to remove the bodies your men left before they arrive."

"Mr. Dobrosławski! Spicy name, mellow haircut, extra-fair skin. He's Slavic alright! But please don't allow my enthusiasm to misdirect my intentions here; Borzywoj, simply put, is not a man deserving of praise. You can tell a lot about a person by the manner in which they conduct themselves upon the accrument of power. Some act modestly with a commitment to fruitful justice and honesty, and some, unfortunately, let it go straight to their head. Don't get me wrong, Borzywoj had a genuinely tragic upbringing, it breaks my heart, but former abuse is no excuse for a life of totalitarian sentiment, and most likely, war crimes. I'm sure Dobrosławski is a very skilled tractician, and I'm not going to pretend that I'm some expert in military stratagems, but 25 seems dangerously young to be possessing the power of a general. Maybe that's the issue? Maybe if this otherwise wayward soul took the time in his twenties to discover himself in a meaningful fashion and have some actual fun, maybe he wouldn't need to resort to enslaving his former adversaries under that asinine pseudonym? It's completely barbaric!"

(Breathes)

"I appreciate what he's trying to do, strengthening national identity and trimming unnecessary expenditure seem like honest endeavors as far as I'm concerned, but there's a saying about trying to thread a needle with a cannon right? Or was it a feather duster? Either way, my point stands. I don't like to gossip, but this Butcher Borzywoj is just a towering hothead to me, and no chess leaderboards will change that."

• Carl Kirkman, General Manager (#1309)

"Warlord? I'll admit, this makes me a little nervous, but I'd be lying if I said she didn't speak in the most wonderful prose! It takes more than elocution lessons to assert such dominance in one-hundred words or less. High IQ? Sure! I'm convinced! Destined for management? Possibly. Assuming her own introversion and preternatural comfort with no-nonsense violence doesn't handicap her own ambitions. In any case, it's amazing what she's achieved at her age; of course having a father of equal might, aggression and competence certainly helps matters. Learning from the best? Absolutely, for all matters pertaining to the little games, laughter, and flights of blood thirsty fancy associated with the life of a bona-fide silk-clad bandit. Everything relating to her own mental health? Well that's just a train-wreck, not that I'm anyone to talk about obsessive stoicism! Ha, ha. (Pauses, sighs woefully) Ha..."

"This warrior has honourable motives though, and I think it's worth being mentioned. The whole dialectic question of mind, self, and measures of personal success are, in my opinion, a little er...primordial, but they certainly don't ring hollow. I'm glad she's taken a proverbial 'chill pill' to her father's more flamboyant display of patriotism, but I'm still uneasy about her seemingly absent aversion to killing, be it in battle or otherwise. I know I've touched on the surface here, but let's face it, there's a lot to Ari's life beyond the arms reach, and maybe it's best I stay purposefully vague until I learn more. Until then...wait, wow, 53 kilograms? Somebody put me on a Bronze Age diet too..."

Good ole corporate management right there, great job! Make those rats believe you care about them, when I know, you don't, and just care about getting that sweet paycheck you so rightfully deserved with all that hard work. After all, Detroit is a shithole. I made it that way, you're welcome. All seriousness, you're alright guy. I like you, you're the first no-eyesore I've seen so far. Congrats. Plus, I do actually believe you are doing what is right for your store, and its employees. It's a rarity to see, and it's nice to see them getting better treatment and getting paid better than what they would have originally earned. If you haven't been there to advocate for them, Corporate always had a nasty reputation for treating its workers like garbage, and I do hope with you around. They'll rethink that, and realize that treating your employees well has a much bigger financial gain. Good luck. "

"I would call this...thing a parasite, but that is too harsh a word for such organisms. No, a parasite can be excused of cruelty through simple obliviousness that its habits damage the host. This self-proclaimed deity is far worse in that it is both cognizant and unrepentant for its own cruelty."

"Truthfully I have a long list of things to call this entity, many of which carry multitudes of memetic kill vectors, but I think the most hurtful for a being of excess would be boring."

"You create an entire world, can bend it all to your whim-and you make it monotonous. Comical, really, that you created it to escape the 'monotony' of an orderly cosmos, but all I see is a parade of effeminate men backstabbing each other for the slightest gains of power with the same nihilistic philosophy, only slightly reflavored based on profession. You've created a world where there can't be anything but monotony, because its very design prevents any diversity-if you don't backstab or trample someone, you will be backstabbed and trampled. Ah, the wonders of cosmic irony."

"Of course the dreariness of your little personal cosmic onahole extends beyond just its inhabitants. You don't toy with universal constants, you don't weave world lines or create art from the stars-you just use it for your own pleasure, your own sustenance. Of course, considering your origin as a hollow shell, it seems your awakening may not have filled the hollow cavity in your head sufficiently to realize this potential."

"So, to conclude, I loathe this being. This being that has the audacity to carve a cosmos from its own hands, and then do nothing to shape it, content to simply glut on its mortal inhabitants. It is at best disgusting and at worst pathetic."

No such thing as a garden of life to look after, no sowing but also no reaping, just observation of whatever entertainment we can find. But hey, you seem like a great...being...uhhh. That thing about the kill-switch really demonstrates that, I think. Freedom is something worth preserving though I'm not sure how that goes with your drive for your Federation's self-preservation; many fellow Anhu believe I'm wrong, but I really do think that we can only ever get our own freedom by doing away with our control of others. I'm not sure if pure freedom can ever exist as power structures always take shape. I sure do hope I'm correct and you are benign. to wave the figurative and literal flag of revolution.

Nevertheless, Sven is seen to show the ruthlessness akin to Alkdor's Emperor by his immediate execution of the Toreadorian Sovereign, instead of considering the option for capture and political manoeuvring to benefit the cause.

In deeper assessment, Sven and an unknown leader utilized a device called the "Promethean Engine" a mechanism that could manipulate the fabric of space and time. In how it specifically operates to achieve this will need further study. Otherwise, in relation to the device, there was betrayal by the unknown leader of the NTFL, whom justifications for this act remain unanswered. That as concluded resulted in its death by Sven.

Overall, in summary, Sven has managed to craft a paramount organization that is engaged with a three front war with NTFL, Toreador, and for what to be believed, the Kingdom of Heaven. The latter, remaining unanswered as to Sven's war against the ones that hold the Universe together.

In regards to personal stance, I am captivated by Sven's journey. Post completed."

Sadly, I couldn't really find any miniature Spanish flags, but I suppose there's always time for the Marcha Real later. (Chuckles) In all seriousness, I do possess a great deal of respect for veterans such as President Franco. It can't be easy losing a parent to battle and subsequently choosing to follow directly in their footsteps as a military tactician. I think it demonstrates significant courage and ambition, and I get the feeling that this man has more of a fire in him than his dresden features let on. It's unfortunate to learn about his scandals regarding hush money-related corruption. Whether the rumors were true or not, I guess I'll never know, but considering Franco's devout nature, I'm almost doubtful with the notion that he'd willingly involve himself in dirty dealings. But, at the end of the day, I guess anything is possible. I mean, by all other measures of discernable integrity, Mr. Franco has acted faithfully and morally in his ascension to power, and as far as I'm concerned, that's good enough for me."

"I'll admit, he's a little more pious than I'm used to, but I'm glad he's found a constructive outlet and source of wisdom in his daily life. Professional ethics seem to be in such short supply these days, and it seems like faith has proved a crucial role in promoting democratic values and the merit of desegregation for this gentleman. Regardless, no quantity of well-intentioned patriotism can excuse his actions during the Vietnam War. The effects of agent orange were, in my opinion, incredibly horrific, and I'd say he has to do a lot of explaining to do in this department. He should try being a little more careful with the (Ahem) 'U-Word' since it's bound to make him a few enemies, but that's less of a warning and more of a cautionary word of personal experience. (Checks behind his shoulder, lowers his voice.) It's not a political path to go down lightly, that's for sure. Now look, Franco is a complicated person, I don't think anyone can argue with that, but I can imagine a number of much, much worse potential counterparts who could've been in Franco's place, and so I'd say the US sort of lucked out here. And that's that."

QUOTE

"Her domain is tech and science, and she attained great understanding of it despite having dyslexia. Ya' know dudes, that weird condition, where ya' just can't read or write something, with texts becoming a freaky mishmash of letters. Math formulas can be read just fine as far as I have heard during my days as a road warrior. It may be selective, it may be severe. I bet her case wasn't so severe, since she managed to do well academically despite these problems. And now, she promotes technological ways to treat this disorder, which is pretty awesome! Perhaps Neoners, out techy faction could spare some of their tech for her and help her in reseraches, possibly giving her tools for a breakthrough, and in exchange get some of her insights on this problem, which would not only help to fix dyslexia itself, but also lead to general improvements in our psychology and psychiatry, which still lag behind most countries due to Edgar's regime book burning. Yes, he and his fanatics attacked it so much, it went all the way to medieval level. After the revolution, we had to salvage the remaining data, attract foreign specialists, improvise and experiment alot to restore our knowledge in this field of medicine at least somehow. And still, there are large gaps. Our technology is pretty much lopsided, somewhere we are advanced, somewhere primitive, and fixin' this gonna take decades.

I can only commend her for her enthusiasm in improvement of lives for the people, and ability to handle her responsibilities." -Overboss Shawn Bjornson

"Oh... Shawn Bjornson, huh!?"

Given what you told me, I would say I rather despise him. While he certainly has his heart in the right place in some regards, he is one of those who are strong and regularly uses that to enforce his will upon those weaker than him. While he certainly has no superpowers in any sort of sense, I would still hunt him down and make him weak.

Even his so called weakness of an ineptitude with nunchucks is mostly a false one, since Nunchucks are one of the weakest weapons there are, being underwhelming in comparison to a mere stick." Absence of strength

RESPONSE FROM THE INSTITUTE

"How romantic. An enemy of the strong, supporter of the weak... Only one small detail: you yourself seem pretty strong, even stronger than your enemies. Which means that your pretense to care for those weaker than yourself is just that, a pretence, a sham, and power is the only thing you crave. You, the superman, are the basic pillar of an ideology that emphasizes and exalts weakness! Do you even realise how hypocritical that is? Do you realise that that itself deals a crippling blow to the tenet of "the weak are capable of defeating the strong"? I advise you, my good chap, to find a better excuse for creating your personal cult, it won't be long before your faithful realise the wall of lies you have diligently built."
