When I browsed the Metallum forum, most people categorized FIR as metalcore in some way. I do concede that it's likely post-hardcore with metalcore influences, but that doesn't explain why the Wikipedia says it is post-hardcore and metalcore. It does sound kind of metalcorish, honestly.

Wikipedia is damn inaccurate when it comes to genres. It's quality can range from editors with a hardon for changing "Z is an Xian Y band" to just "Z is an Xian rock band" because they think every genre with guitars in is rock and nothing else; to listing every single influence the band has had (i.e. a grunge band did a single song with hip hop samples and now rap rock and alternative hip hop have been added)

At the end of the day, it what it sounds like to your ear, I guess, but I'm without doubt that FIR's metalcore-ness extends only as far as Radke's vocals.

Pity Sex - Keep

Then you agree it is metalcorish, if only for the vocals, so it has metalcore influences. ☐

I come across a lot of bands on Metallum that have Black metal or X genre influences, yet not enough to be listed as that genre being included.

The same song was still playing, so I didn't feel the need to post it again.
