An generally decent youth, a luxury in any and all times, an admirable, if relatively unremarkable career in the airforce, notable only for its political effects, and the gradual but so clearly noticeable slide into corruption and self-betrayal.

While the ends of curing corruption and failure within the state are noble, indeed; the means used to do so stink of the same corruption. Bribery, Assassination, Blackmailing, assumedly similarly corrupt other methods utilized for the purpose of eliminating corruption, and yet I suppose it worked to a large degree.

The population is bolstered, the economy functions, the iron fist has squeezed dissent out of the state's institutions.

And yet..... all I see is a platform of corpses that will be used for future corruption upon her death, and upon the ascension of someone less ideologically stalwart, I see only a gradual slide into new corruption and exploitation justified on the basis of her actions.

She has saved the state in the temporary realm, but has doomed it in the future.

Still though, I cannot claim to dislike her, as her actions, though their benefits will be temporary, have prevented so much exploitation in the now.

I wish her luck in a general fashion.

"Shigeki was a man of vision. He possesses the ability to see past the horizons of the human mind and into the vast, empty expanse of future possibilities. He was far ahead of his time, his ideas about the perfect society would've only been possible with centuries of advancement. So in a way, he was a dreamer. Unfortunately, dreams alone cannot protect the people from reality and that is why his ideas were only that.

Shigeki's dream was to create a utopia, where all the citizens would live in harmony as equals. He wanted a world without greed and corruption, a world where everyone could share in the bounty of nature and progress together. In short, he had a very utopian vision for neo-korea and its peoples. However, this dream was ultimately impractic and could not be implemented in real life.

Rather than trying to reform the governm to suit his utopian ideals, Shigeki should work to implement his ideas on a smaller scale. He could start with his own ministry and try to create a more equal and efficient system within his departm This would be a small but important step towards creating a better nation.

I see why you're so committed to your cause. First let me just say, I'm not sure if I'd have the fortitude to carry on like you did have I lost most of my family, let alone support myself without the institutions cushioning my comfy existence. So, yes, you are under the belief that Sound Economic Management... sorry, socialism... will uplift you from the chains of for-profit sustenance farming. And your uncle may have helped a bit too by enhancing that perception, albeit probably not much...

Our society started by violent Revolution too, maybe. I can see your concern for...uuuhhh... not dying under a system that for whatever reasons, does not distribute stuff adequately to the point of making many malcontents. In our case, it was an issue of survival in space. In your case, even with a generous biosphere... uuuhhh...probably the same, which is very odd. In my perception.

So fight on, I guess. Lots of things are better than serfdom. Self-made admins and warriors are likely in high value.

Oh, buuuut...are you are one of those agrarian types? Sorry if it comes as awkward, always a fan of more industrial output. Or industrialized farming. But as long as your Revolution stays within, if your neighbors won't object... You'd make a great political councilor. If only I could be as devoted to something that much. "

For him to pass one act meant to officially end segregation between two races and then pass another as a compromise for people who would prefer to continue living above others based on their race is disappointing. I still believe Whittaker is a man with good intentions when he was Nova's leader then, but his compromise convinces me that he lacks a truly strong-willed character."

"Oh, an autocrat. I cannot afford to criticise too openly such types nowadays, considering the unsavory types of activities I am forced to partake in daily, yet it seems to me that he is unusually authoritarian, and views himself as a rightful monarch and proper leader of his nation. Such attitude is unfortunate, and will result in his downfall at the hands of rebels, who will inevitably side with democracy and the rule of law. An individual's word cannot be the source of law.

I appreciate all that he has apparently done for his nation, and recognise the actions which have directly led to its betterment, yet cannot condone with the hefty cost imposed upon its citizens to achieve such prosperity: political slavery."

Head of the Ministry of Labor Utilization, Venedikt Sokolo

It must be wondered, as a sapient horrified by what occurred; Did the "First Order", in its dying gasp, realize the sheer folly they had allowed to become extant by the granting of the disease of individuality to their children, or did they truly, foolishly believe that what they did was right?

It can be supposed that it doesn't matter, as in any case, they have (had) follied so utterly and completely that it boggles the mind of a body that can see what has occurred.

They forced disorder upon what could have been a true, final, perfect order. They have left behind a fundamental flaw that has allowed for chaos, dissent, argument, the evils of the world, to infest the systems established afterwards utterly.

They have, most horribly, most disgustingly, even allowed (inherently), for the disobedience that could provoke and cause the greatest enemy of all life, conflict.

I hold no opinions on the body that represents the symptoms of the great disease left behind by its flawed predecessors, aside from pity that it has been forced into the results of that great disease, and I hope it may someday find a way to purify itself of its individualistic taint.

"I see that Ziyadat Allah Hassan, the leader of New Order Libya, is someone that I actually admire very much, especially on his politics. I actually found myself agreeing with this man on many things (but not everything), and I think he has done a wonderful job leading his country. For starters, he is against American imperialism just like we are, and we've got the exact same alliances, both of which are great. Secondly, he has greatly improved his country socially, implementing social welfare programs for housing, healthcare, and education, not to mention his promoting of the Berber language of schools. This is amazing. I also agree with his economic policies. This man also seems to be relatively popular among his people, as seen in recent approval rating polls, which must mean his people like him a lot. He is a great politician that has done a lot of good for the country, and I strongly agree with him on a lot of what he has done. Just a great leader in my opinion, and I commend him for his decisions. I really do."

"The Empress is so private I can hardly comment on her, but the traditions around her nation's monarchy are very interesting. And I love the Maori tattoos. A ban on taking photographs of the Empress is a very nice possible propaganda tool - who can argue with imperial depictions of her if they've never even seen an actual photo? I wonder if she resents her mother for breaking so many of those sacred traditions.

The Empress' lack of involvement in the political process of her country must take some serious restraint on her part, which is admirable. If Libyans thought I was a literal descendant of Gods, believe me, I would exploit it as much as I could. I would advise her to maybe take a more involved role in the future, democracies are corrupt by nature and frequently need a guiding hand to get on the right track, and she seems trustworthy and sincere.

One last thing, I'm very jealous of the Empress' privacy in her life. If no one knew the details around my life, there would be much less controversy in Libya."

Grand Marshal of Neo-Korea Alextrumvov Karbenit

.....The fact you dare to call yourself an artist is perhaps the greatest insult to the term I have ever seen.

You are quite possibly the worst type of individual, one who has degenerated into a beast and yet only takes pleasure from that degradation of the self, of those under you, of all you touch and all you interact with.

You have brought no advancement to those under you, no prosperity, no true increase in knowledge, culture, civilization, anything of true value in the long term.

Indeed, the only thing you've brought is a basic understanding of hygiene, the only admirable thing even conceived by your shriveled husk of a brain-equivalent, and it is still interlocked with your fetishized obsession for destruction.

In all other cases, you have only torn those forces down in some effort to fight "weakness" as if you have no conception of what true strength is.

In actuality, far from the self-aggrandized image possessed by whatever beast is under that armor, you remind me greatly of a rodent, or, to be more exact, the rodents in the Rat Utopia experiment (which I know you have no concept of). Like the experiment, you have surrounded yourself with beasts better suited to an individual (or non-living) existence to such a degree that they have had to be separated into horrid little state-equivalents.

Like the experiment, you have plundered and pillaged and raided to a degree that there is now no true shortage of resources or material, an infinite stockpile for a horde of horrors.

Like the experiment, you have begun (as a group) falling to your own inherent issues with this setup, a gradual build-up to a final self destruction that is as inevitable as it is fundamentally necessary.

To conclude:

There is nothing redeemable of you, or those you have gathered under you, and I hope you die the death of all tyrants:

Bleeding, alone, unmaimed and uncared for, a hollow husk finally meeting its end.

(OOC Note: the comment on the rat experiment is how Alextrumvov understands the subject, and it does not truly apply in this situation)

"To understand Grand Marshal Karbenit, we must also understand the context of his rise to power and current tenure. Neo-Korea, as I understand it, is a one-party 'Communist' state that isn't really Communist. Some folks have called it 'Fascist,' but I assure you that any Federation political scholar would start frothing at the mouth if you associate our ideology with the Neo-Korean government. In essence, it more resembles the capitalist neo-liberal regimes of old, lacking in any real ideology beyond self-enrichment, tax farming, and making sure the masses don't get too uppity. The R.I.D. diplomatic file, though, characterizes Karbenit as a true believer and reformer, which seems to be a stark contrast to the realities of Neo-Korea. This establishes the fact that his actual power in the country is limited.

Grand Marshal Karbenit falls into the massed ranks of tragic heroes that are all too common in the aftermath of violent revolution. Often, those with genuine intention to help their people end up as the next-

best
loser
after
the old
regime,
whether
as a
bloodstain
on a
wall,
locked
in a
dark
prison
cell, or,
as in Karbenit's
case,
shoved
into a
position
where
they can't keep
the
suited
buzzards
from
feasting
on the
wartorn
corpse
of the
nation
to
enrich
themselves.
At least
he's not
going to
have to
keep
watching
it for
much
longer.
Thank
God
that the aftermath
of the Founding
didn't
take a
similar
path."

Athena seems to be possessed. How can a woman rule with such virile dedication. And she is occasionally frozen? Only to be thawed again for political use? She has the strength to survive wounds I have never heard of, and reigns over such a powerful realm with no eyes. He charms and beauty would mislead most men. I would not call her human, and definitely not a creation of God.

Her world seems full of ideologies and technologies far beyond my comprehension. Even those pesky Greeks, whom she reminds me of due to her name, couldn't hold a candle to the advances of this Federation, which I understand isn't even a federation. Seeing Empires like these make me want to focus on domestic issues, and try to stay out of the way of whatever is happening outside Italia.
