A few things can be understood about their world. One is that Not only was Germany not unified, Occitania controls a territory even beyond that of the largest territory claimed by French Nationalists as their natural borders. Andalusia and Castile exist simultaneously (I can understand why Spain doesn't exist, as Aragon apparently never unified with Castile, but how does Andalusia exist?)

Andalusia was created as a client state of Occitania following the spread of Catharism and the reorganisation of the Iberian Peninsula during the 15th century. When it came to dividing up its neighbours, Occitania's monarchs took the lesson of divide et impera to heart.

They're essentially a more pluralistic version of the Hohenzollern monarchy in a timeline where the North German Federation persisted. Also, Their timeline's version of World War II involved an alliance consisting of France, Turkey, Ukraine, and South Germany going up against the Federation. Quite a colorful rogue's gallery.

The Coryan Congress, a bicameral legislative body, is made of the Senate (with 100 senators) and the House of Representatives (with 500 senators). It has regular legislative powers, though the Head of State has the right to refuse to assent to the law. Also, they apparently only have one party.

The nation has an impressive colonial empire for one based off Germany, and in the timeline that this country is in, the Holy Roman Empire still lost to France, but apparently there wasn't a Confederation of the Rhine.

Practically nothing is known about Alexander Mercer, that mysterious, immortal figure that founded the Infinite Cybusian Empire and has ruled it ever since. His age is hinted to at least be in thirteen digits while his birthplace and ancestry is practically impossible to know provided you don't ask the man (?) himself.

Monarchy is very much prevalent, presumably due to no French Revolution I'm assuming. The revolutions of 1848 still happen, but most nations just implement more liberal and modern reforms to limit the monarchy's power. I
