Uh that's not criminalised. Up to the company and worker's representatives to agree on a proper response. He would not be protected from losing his job though.

Not inherently a crime, but may lead to greater judgement by the local authorities if another crime is committed in the process.

First offense a 50k fine. Second offense 2 months in jail. Each following offense afterwards will add another 2 months in jail. So if someone does it 4 times they will get 6 months in jail.

That isn't really a crime if you agree that Senscaria itself has the ultimate say, you just need the right amount of territory or conquer it yourself out on the frontiers that are the galaxies outside the Senscarian Regime or Greater Polity zone.

Senscaria has numerous autonomous zones across galaxies known as "Clone States" that have different ideologies but are named such due to Clones being the main authority to take over the parts that they do govern.

Senscaria will provide the necessary resources, manpower, and other equipment to help you on your intergalactic conquest.

If it's done in Senscaria Proper or the Greater Polity they will kick you out and do the same things I mentioned, but they will hold your hand in doing so.

Throwing a party involving heavy substances (or the party getting too wild and violence breaking out)?

If by heavy you mean physically massive, then it's not a crime, unless you physically throw it at someone, in which case it's something like assault & battery.

If by heavy substances, you mean drugs? Well, typically, it isn't a crime (some traditionalist territories may want to have a word with you, however), but it will typically lead to increased penalties for crimes committed while under the influence.

If you want to skip my post, go ahead. If you don't... Unionization? Might as well continue along this theme.

As in cannibalism? Death by meat grinder.
As in dehumanizing a person of a different class or social structure through libel or slander? Civil settlement decided by a jury of the rich person's peers.

Throwing rocks at and harming stray animals?
