Someone really just called me a summerposter for pointing this out.

Because some people literally spend hour if not days working on their factbooks and only getting a one-line "yeah ok" or something along the lines just feels really fucking lazy. Like atleast READ the thing for like 5 to 10 minutes at minimum before posting.

I spend days on my factbooks too, but I would have no problem if some random user who is bored just say "yeah this is fine".

When the response you get in a "How do your soldiers feel about fighting the AN" thread is:

"Let's show them what our artillery can do"

I think it's fine to /stillme

That, or "HAHA WE DESTROYED EZ SKILL ISSUE" is also generally a shitty thing to do. Like listen dickhead, my nation is not a means for you to show of how sTrOnG your mary-sue powerwank military is.

Wow, you must have really low standards then.

The whole point of threads like that is sharing your work with others and getting feedback on it. Oh, all you have to say is "11/10 this gud ye"? Great, thats nice and all, but that pretty much tells me fuckall. ELABORATE. You don't even have to write a goddamn essay on it, it's not what I expect. The least i want is a short summary about what you liked and the potential critique.

To be fair though calling an artillery fire mission on enemy contact if possible and letting the shells do a lot of the work is the realistic thing to do. That said though it will be probably be at most 5 howitzers shooting 5 rounds per gun and not the grid square removal service they're thinking of.

Well if the purpose of a thread is to communicate, then why don't you communicate that you won't accept responses from a summerposter? I am not saying /stillme'ing a summerposter is a bad thing, I am specifically saying nothing about summerposters before hitting submit and then /stillme'ing when a summerposter actually responds to you is. If you don't like a summerposter, specify that you won't accept summerposts, is it hard?

No, I once got a response that was literally just that. In a thread meant to share your soldiers comments on the ANs military.

Hm yes let me just put down extra text that is most likely going to be ignored anyway.

Let me put this bluntly: your argument is hot garbage and I can already tell that if I keep at it you'll just regurgitate it over and over and over again. I tried explaining it and talking sense into it but if your just gonna plug your ears and go "LALALA I DIDNT HEAR YOU" then all it will result in is both my time and patience being wasted.

So let me put it this way regarding the summerposter issue, at the small risk of sounding elitist because tone can get lost in text. In short: I actually don't really mind if you put 1 line, 2 lines, or how many lines. I may have written huge paragraphs or novels, but I don't expect the same back from anyone here - old or new.

However, it is important to note that as people who spent time here just for the sake of hobby, and appreciating others' work and their own hobbies, it's good to at least give it a read and hopefully give a line or a take that is not generic "Very excellent" alone. Summerposting doesn't mean a single line of response; it's the lack of effort that makes you go "Hmm, heard this one before."

I will admit, I got affected by that a lot last year, but... ehh, I am kinda over it, if you can say that. Now I just had to deal with threads dying on me due to lack of activity!

It's the only way to teach summerposters to stop. Most of them don't understand the significance of a warning or loom, so the only way they'll understand is by skipping them until they start putting in some effort.

And to add on, I am aware there is a fine line and summerposting can be mistaken with "actually only being here for the very first time". I have been there. 😊

The important thing - summerposters, normal posters, or just about anyone (other than the obvious DOS, troll, pornspammer) - is to just keep on learning and to try. ♥

My policy (I guess) would be to respond to both the summerposting AN and its higher-quality AAN, and ~~yet~~ explain the reason. I mean "be nice" is kinda a good principle to hold.

if you're going to post in F7, at least read more than the first line of someone's work. it's common courtesy, even if you don't necessarily like the person, that's no excuse to not read their work before replying to them. i fully understand that getting feedback is why people want to post in F7, not getting it, but much like paying your taxes, if it's agreed upon in society that it's too much time and effort, then, unfortunately, nobody's gonna bother to do that. if you don't post quality work, don't expect a quality reply, and don't act surprised when quality drops across the board in F7 replies because "effortposting is too much work." it's not elitism, it's basic mental algebra. why should-- no, why would people bother to read other people's work if that behavior isn't being reciprocated, and vice versa?

You have absurdly high standards for a forum that was designed as a catch-all for dumb forum games, and in fact borderline spam. I feel like there are much better places to get feedback on your factbooks. There are even regions dedicated to potential factbook topics - I like to write about my constructed language, and so I reside in a region for conlangers. Calling F7 a wastebasket is a flaw in itself, and mind you, it's not just because I have been here for far too longer than I would admit. I can and will admit that F7 is home to semi-spammy games and threads, including the classic "You are banned!" where you ban the player above for the weirdest of reasons. That's fair, there are a lot of such games and that's okay.

There are, however, actual effort and work that went into some of these threads and it would be absentminded to assume that they are all but spam. Other than regions (which are actually a long shot because you are hard-pressed to be in either the huge regions where your post gets lost in a rapid RMB, or the small ones with not a lot of activity), most people here actually get their feedback on F7, made friends, and developed each other's lore to the point that they were basically unrecognisable (in a good way) from years ago, all thanks to the friendships forged. ♥

Could F7 be in a better shape? Yes, just not in the elitist/overly high standards (which I am not saying anyone is doing here). We can still be a sub-forum known for our casual attitude, while dishing out the effort and make other sub-forums go "Wow, they have actual stuff in there."

Pretty much, it kinda makes me wanna break out my cane and old man's beard before saying "Back in my day..."

F7 can be a lot of fun when you find threads you like and are usually filled with users who actually read through one's factbooks. For me personally, it just makes the thread more memorable and typically makes me return to said thread. Like there is a small reward, in my mind, that you get from making a quality post. But alas, that's my two cents on the topic.

You have absurdly high standards for a forum that was designed as a catch-all for dumb forum games, and in fact borderline spam. I feel like there are much better places to get feedback on your factbooks. There are even regions dedicated to potential factbook topics - I like to write about my constructed language, and so I reside in a region for conlangers. Much better place to get feedback on my conlang than a functional wastebasket.

i've yet to see a worldbuilding region that doesn't focus on building an overarching plot (i.e. here, where i've stashed a puppet) that manages to provide effective and focused literary criticism. f7 is more of an "rp lite" forum imo.
