Wanting to write about culture and more about Gandoor in detail is specifically why I use an off-site wiki as opposed to the NS factbooks. That way I can write about whatever I want, I don't have to deal with factbook length limitations, I can use formatting I'm more familiar with, and it's just generally easier to navigate around vs NS factbooks.

I personally have nothing against it, because I can see the appeal in using off-site factbooks that you have more control over formatting or other bits as much as you need. ♥

I actually tried it long ago... and I failed, though it's just because I am a lazy arse that didn't want to port over everything.

I am also seeing a bit of a problem with this soon, since my Military / Civil Defense factbook is reaching 46k characters out of the 90k limit, and I still need to add equipment.

I keep seeing power armor and advanced armor that can stop cannon rounds or a .50 AP sniper round. I have no problem with such armor existing and being used in an RP. The problems is that they don't realize that even if your armor could stop a shell, the concussive power of a 20mm shell would instantly liquify the person inside of the armor. And if a .50 hits it, the person is definitely suffering from shattered bones and severely damaged organs. What makes it worse is very few nations with said armor includes some kind of shock absorbers, at the very least.

Hathian Prime does not use NS Stats.

HP and all other nations take place in an AU. HP is not Germany.

I recognized that issue as time went by, which is why as late as my days in Metaman, I have always prescribed Power Armor to already Superhuman figures, or just up and replaced them with robots.

You're overestimating the 20x102mm. A typical round will have around 100 Ns of momentum - a 100kg quarterback hitting you at 7 m/s will deliver 7 times as much. Tank rounds are a different story, but a 20mm round to hardshell power armor capable of absorbing it will just knock you around a bit. We already have empirical evidence of people's ribs getting broken and internal bleeding of organs from getting hit with intermediate rounds with a plate rig, putting them out of the fight for the moment.

It's not hard to imagine the same result from carrying armour equipped for 50 BMG given that one can carry such a thing in the first place. A 20 mm hitting something rated for a 50 cal is probably the same as a 50 cal hitting a level 3 plate.

Whatever the effect it is most certainly going to put them out of commission for a while (or permanently) getting hit with one of those calibers.

Depends. An upsized ballistic plate sure, but I'd expect full body hardshell power armor with shock absorbers to distribute energy and momentum a lot better - you have the rest of the armor providing structural support to the chest plate.

I don't see how someone firing a rifle relates to the point i made. And besides that, even if said armor can absorb a 20mm round and only have the wearer get "knocked around a bit", the neck, hips, and any joints will have semi-large gaps for mobility purposes. Power armor, to me at least, is very impractical as a "main battle suit".

I kind of avoided putting people in front of my flags, but I decided to cave in, though mostly I just stick to actual characters in the nation so that they can either get a fair grasp of who to expect or just point at the guy in my flag and say "wait isn't that the leader" or something. The latter mildly amuses me.

Another GE&T cliché is those players who respond in applications with phrases like "You decide" or "Anything is fine", especially when asked for specific things like addresses and locations. I mean, why would you want to participate in an economic RP when you don't have the slightest desire to fill even half of an application?

I haven't posted in GE&T in a good while (I get bored of almost every thread just being 'BUY OUR MILITARY EQUIPMENT' or 'DRUGS FOR SALE! GET YOUR DRUGS HERE! 2 FOR 1 SALE ON CRACK COCAINE!') but one cliché that rightfully pissed me off was posting multiple replies to a thread in a row.

That, and seemingly unlimited funds to buy. I have not been on GE&T that often, so I apologise for the lack of experience, but from what I have seen, there were nations that bought a million tanks, jets, ammo, etc. I understand you need arms, but that sounds like something that will topple not only your government, but will force your entire populace to start eating the armor plating of the tanks to stave off malnutrition.

No, no you don't understand buying millions of tanks is totally realistic and normal. Ignore the fact that in the actual real world there are only like 70,000 tanks in total (including ones in storage). One nation having like three million tanks makes perfect logical sense.

i just decided for palisade to make a shitpost-y image of sacha pointing a gun at the viewer. once it was done i sort of sat back, laughed, and thought "hey, why don't i put this on my flag?" and now palisade's flag is 130% more threatening.

if you think about it, compacting the tanks so each tank is an unusable brick and then making a solid wall out of nothing but tank-bricks means that every brick could be a tank by means of several logical fallacies and leaps of reasoning designed to justify a dumb joke.

Royal marriage RPs are seeming to be an extremely overdone thing at the moment, and one nation is a particularly egregious offender of this by seemingly having a new one every day.

seemingly having a new one every day.

Ah, yes, Sharifistan.

Where half the GDP goes to funding the monarchy's weddings abroad after they abandoned their broken shell of a nation and the other half is used to execute druggies because "muh deterrence" and press mujahedeen into the air cavalry that the nation maintains despite all logic going against it.

Just imagine them as banana republics with incompetent leadership and the random armies to be crappy secret police, gendarmerie, and partisans and you should be fine.

I feel singled out...

Heh but really. Sometimes I start something which I think is good but then all of a sudden, I feel engulfed by other puppets' unfinished lore and stop. Or I explore an alternate history scenario and then think "I dunno, I didn't think I'd get this far" and stop writing because the historical PODs and butterflies are so big they're Mothra-sized and I'm intimidated by speculating. For example, I've got a puppet in storage, won't name it:

The premise is that the Home Island was more or less a containment-board fortuitous geographical accident and that the cat-people's Bronze Age collapse in LP's timeline was for the best for the rest of the world, as they get stuck in a Battle Royale on a desertifying island and left the world alone.

In the alternate universe, the Isle is far closer to Macaronesia and Africa...and during the collapse (2100s BCE), environmental refugees of the Old Empire sail out of desperation to Cabo Verde and West Africa, blissfully continue eating their I-Can't-Belive-It's-not-Quinine flower poppies and then they completely fuck up the would-be Bantu Expansion and control most of Sub-Saharan Africa except the Horn and patches of the South by 1 AD. The problem? Even with previous artistic liberties, I'm having such a headache calculating the effects of them encroaching the port cities of Classical Antiquity and how this would affect global trade and the world order...it's bad enough I can't begin to imagine what a world without slavery will look like after the 15th Century.
