Tbh everyone does it IRL, leaders as well, why not? It's not really a cliché, more of the norm

Plus it's meant to make the leader look good, human, and positive.

Nobody wants to stare at an image of their leader glaring at them as if they had committed several atrocities against the state and thus the leader's hatred is so pure that it even seeps openly from every last image of them

I mean, some leaders are just living balls of hate and deranged political takes, so I don't know if a smile is all that necessary.

Soeharto is all that and he's known for his smile, among other things.

Dude, same... I'm starting to get tired of the forum games, especially "react to ANs news (III)!" since the same two AU-America posters keep slamming it with posts reacting to themselves, then bumping it if there's no activity inside of an hour or two.

Like christ man, give everyone else a chance... Plus their news is mostly political by nature, it's all quite boring really.

one NS cliché I know of is the massive amount of "catgirl communist" nations that are just the user's... ahem desires mixed with a soapbox for their ideology. That and the cliché of progressive Americas with a bare amount of actual alt history

I can only think of one of the former, tbh. But the latter? I feel like nations that are basically "America but better" tend to be very lame, regardless of ideology.

You can only see "America but Sanders/SocDem", "America but Trump/NeoCon", "America but Queen Elizabeth/NeoLib", and/or "America but Stalin/Hitler/OtherLARP/Authoritarian" so many times before you go half-insane.

I will agree, hence why I like to emphasize alt history with my nations, though, this one I'm using right now isn't really that original of an idea.

But yeah, stock "America but [politician user likes]" are pretty boring. If it isn't an IRL person, it's always a thinly-veiled caricature of the user's ideology projected onto a persona with no personality beyond ideology.

I'm sure we've gone over the sheer cliché that is American political wanks by this point, but the ones that err on the Republican side are always the most depressing. Mostly because they are about the most basic thing that one could possibly create in this climate and never bother to deal with anything meaningful in the name of political or social issues beyond "liberalism and socialism are bad and the people that follow them are bad."

One thing I prided myself after shedding my (pre)teen edginess was portraying one of the main "villain" countries in NS while still maintaining that the GWO's troops were, mostly, a blend of soon-to-be-terrified late-teenagers just out of high school led by a mix of jaded burnouts, careerists, and "my family line have all been officers!" types, albeit ones with extensive training and experience. What made/makes (who knows if I'll RP again) the GWO's military good is a mix of heavy military spending, a collective of very capable intelligence agencies, and a competent officer corps more than anything else.

tbh i find both mainstream american wanks to be irritating to a fucking insane degree. at risk of sounding like a smug, self-satisfied centrist, i'd say that both democratic and republican americawanks are awful tbh. the cushy, 100% perfect social-democratic america (or adjacent) wank is just fucking annoying, and republican nationalist americas are, as you say, depressing to look at no you don't, there was an era where people thought godrods were a way to get around the unspoken "no nukewar without prior OOC coordination" rule. Every-fucking-body was talking about godrodding everything they could. It was obnoxious and bad.

As much as it makes me uncomfortable at times, countrywanks are a method of escapism to visualize a scenario that is currently not reality.

Also, Ryou Black Islands was infamous for (among other things) bizarre superweapons such as subterranean fuel-air bombs and drill-tipped RPGs.
