Double ninj'd...

AFAIK, I don't believe so. I think it's only a rules violation if it's on a flag, and even then, there's exceptions.

Occitania is first in a lot of good things; transportation and train networks, electricity output and peaceful nuclear energy, the world's largest GDP and individual purchasing power, and it's also the world's #1 tourist destination... apparently mostly the snooty cultural kind of tourism.

If I'm reading this correctly, in their continuity the US won a nuclear war against Russia and China... but while the US didn't have to deal with nuclear fallout, the POLITICAL fallout fucked 'em up but good.

Most of their male citizens, as a rule, prefer to wear fedoras and pinstripe suits with a walking cane for fashion. Women, however, lean more towards the skintight bodysuits and their sarongs which are quite colourful.

After reading about their technology it seems there isn't anything they CANT do. They can make their own stuff, put it in another dimension, then zip off with their FTL spaceship, which is probably indestructible, invisible, and might as well be nanotech too. Cool stuff.

Ninja'd: It appears that they are run by a socialist anime overlord in New Zealand after seizing control. Also, the vice president is Al Gore, obviously. Why wouldn't it be.

America discovered this island in the Atlantic Ocean in the 1990s. Greece was also interested, and sent settlers 3700 miles from home. After some disputes, it became its own country.

The art culture of both Hatsunia and Europe became heavily influenced and intertwined (to a degree) in the 19th century. It is said Impressionist art was inspired by the Hatsunese ukiyo-e woodblock prints.

Th Haudegen Putsch was, in reality, not a Norwegian attempt to take back Svalbard but an attempt to reinforce and relieve the Wehrmacht in their attempted coup against the SS-supported government of Haudegen. It happened during the second World War, and involved 150 troops from Norway, aiding a 25-man strong defector force in Wehrmacht, and was an utter and complete humiliation for the Norwegian side.

The Baltic Empire was created after the secularisation of the Teutonic Order in the 1500s. It's presently a federal state, comprising of Prussia, Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia among several other states. Their head of state is Gustav IV, bearing the title of King of the Balts. They joined the Great War in the early 20th century on the side of Britain and Germany against France.
