I have learned that "the nation suffers from a high rate of poverty and severe corruption; however, because of its fertile farmlands, it is one of the world's largest exporters of grain."

So... ouch to that. The people could have been feed greatly and prosper from the grain (like export it, let it be manufactured, then get it back) and the farmlands they are using but unfortunately, corruption is always a nasty thing.

The Cesque Franc is a very highly-valued currency - each Franc is worth around 5 dollars, or 4 pounds. Which makes it the most valuable currency in the world - unless, of course, the IC financial dynamics are substantially different.

Their armed forces utilize practically no organic soldiers. Instead, Mark X combat robots are utilized as both infantry and aircraft, while various forms of drone and autonomous submarine fill any remaining combat roles. All this is centrally controlled by the SilverNet AI network.

It seems Hatsunia took a different path than its real-world counterpart, Japan, in WW2. They joined the Allies when China fell to the Axis through the fascist Blue Shirts Society, and at the end of the war China ended up getting split into north and south, with much the same characteristics as RL Korea. Unburdened by a WW2 defeat and the concessions RL Japan had to make, Hatsunia chugged on steadily and ended up making nuclear weapons and a southeast Asian international union, and also become an international leader in technological innovation. They kept an army where Japan had to give theirs up, and their Defense Forces participated in global peacekeeping and humanitarian efforts. Oh, and they went to the moon.

In the less-funded rural areas, law of the Jungle is what goes for law and order. I wonder why those areas aren't well-funded, but honestly it's not surprising, most countries have some poorly-funded area or the other. Given the massive size of their country, it's expected.
