On that note: Hey, inspiration comes in the weirdest of times and places.

Are you sitting down right now during your free time and am prepared to write something? You probably have no ideas now.

Ahh, but are you about to sleep soon or at work or at some timing that you can't write? Ideas galore, even your ideas have their little smaller ideas!

Are you referring to me as an 'it'? My pronouns are he/him/his. Anyway, I'm not sure why you're such an enthusiastic advocate for people not responding to me when you keep responding to me yourself (despite believing that everything I do is part of some plan to bait people).

Ah, shower thoughts. I get those too right after I came from work, heh. It's actually one of those times that I can actually write down my ideas, provided procrastination didn't get me first.

No, they're talking about your continued threadjack about your proposal at vote. There's a thread for that over in the SC forum. Don't say another word about it here.

Agreed, its time to make F7 redundant by packing up and moving to NSG. I bet we'd get a warm welcome by the folk there 😊

My greatest inspirational breakthroughs tend to come to me when I'm taking walks.

With the weather outside being frightful though, my ideas are by contrast in a bit of a drought...

Yeah, a good chunk of my lore ideas are still floating around in my mind instead of being pinned down in writing.

Is F7 immune to /pol/itician bait because we're never too bored or is it because half of this community doesn't have the attention span to read and get offended while the other half would shrug it off as low-effort edgelordery?

Ngl, the occasional NSG dumpster fire is amusing in its own morbid way.

Cliche: "Quality" over quantity; basically rather than making your army, or economy, or what ever twice as big numerically, you make it stronger, to the point that it becomes pretty much objectively less effective.

Like having twenty landship-class tanks than spending all those resources on more numerous, more capable regular tanks
