It's literally an ideology that fuses elements of Bolshevism and fascism.

And we all know the Bolsheviks and fascists were the best of friends and there was certainly no fighting between believers in those ideologies at all whatsoever. It was all completely peaceful between them.

Edit: Also you have a fuckin Hatsune Miku flag so IDK why I'm even pretending to care about your opinion.

so I could be completely wrong but that's how I've seen the trend going recently. These nations fall into the pit of being too fixated on whatever their ideology is and what it does or what their country does because of it while everything else is either absent or bland. I understand that Nationstates is a politically focused Australian browser game but seeing whateverism take center stage instead of anything else part of a nation 4 times out of 5 really drains from the overall experience, especially on F7. Militaries can also fall victim to this but considering the how and the why people do these things, it's a whole realm of its own.

i definitely only remember these nations becoming so, so common around 2019 or 2020, but to be fair, my entire teenage years are a hazy fog in my mind so it could have been before then. like, they always existed, but after that youtuber made that video and especially now that the pandemic is going on way more people that don't really care about worldbuilding or anything like that are here clogging the site up. at least they don't stay long.
i'm personally kind of afraid that i'm kind of doing that myself, but i worry about everything, so... i swear there was something i was gonna say that was related to this but i forgot what it was...

tbf even wiki says nazbol was seriously considered in the twenties. you know, the same time the nazis were forming. they literally developed alongside each other and contributed to each others' formations. besides, appeals to origins are still fallacies- modern nazbol is undeniably influenced strongly by nazis and is hardly any different from nazism in practical terms. it's literally run by fucking skinheads who don't want to call themselves nazis in a country the nazis killed 25 million people in an attempt to conquer, don't know how anyone can ignore that.

Yeah and the one of the literal founders of the modern National Bolshevik Party says he views it as a point between communism and fascism.

It's been said once and I shall repeat it

Jreg and its consequences have been disastrous to Nationstates.

Ustryalov was 32 when Mussolini seized power and he made his political writings in the years prior with no connection to fascism. Georges Sorel died in the same year Mussolini seized power. I don't know why you're bringing solzhenitsyn into this.

when you arrive there naturally within the nation's context it makes sense-like, if you can say "aight, here's what happened in this althist or worldbuilding project that led to these batshit nations existing", then it works. but if you're just making it for le wacki then of course it's gonna be shit.

No, best case of Nazbol being related to National Socialism is Ernst Neikisch works. Most Nazbol reject fascism. They also reject internationalist socialism.

I'm just gonna point out that trying to argue about what an ideology/political position means based on early history of the terms involved is dumb as shit because big shock ideologies can change and expand over time.

No one fuckin acts like left and right politics still have the exact same definitions that they did when the terms originated during the French Revolution.
