"Hmm, cant say she really left a positive impression after what she previously mentioned about me. do i consider Ari delusional? very much so. No, I find the idea of being worshiped repulsive. Ruling like i am a god? that's rather cute of her to think such, because i don't think gods who rule the way she feels i do would do what they can to help their own people as equals like i have done so ever since. in fact, i tend to enjoy working along side them, and by doing so, i have gained their loyalty. i don't need to "mold" anyone when i legitimately earn their trust and respect... but i digress."

"Ari's motives are a bit unclear to me, but i have noted her position gaining more power and authority since her arrival in it. not necessarily a bad thing, but that opinion is very dependent on their motives. she is also a bit of a warlord, which i cannot really get behind unless there is a really good reason for it. but in the end, she is the leader, and thus it is up to her if that is the path she wishes to take. but in terms of international views, it will not be so positive. i will also again point out her quickness to judge others without studying them properly. that can be a dangerous move, and if she is to stay in power, she will need to rethink that approach lest she get in to trouble in some way. overall, i do not dislike her, but her views on me are disappointing. i am however willing to forgive and forget, i have more interest in establishing cordial relations with others, and ari is no exception, if she is willing to do the same."

"A common communist? Well...this is going to be very difficult, but I'd like to look at things holistically before I make any rash conclusions. From an academic standpoint, of course, I'm absolutely fascinated. Cosmic entities on their own are incredible, so being able to simultaneously live multiple lives in the 'omni-verse' is something truly inspiring. I mean, there's certainly no shred of doubt that Sera has honourable intentions, and it's always reassuring to see someone so very protective of their own. Additionally, her philosophy of leadership that dictates modesty is a fairly refreshing sight, and at least in my opinion, attests to a certain degree of administrative sensibility that is usually lacking in those with similar degrees of legislative power. Obviously, anyone who knows me can confirm that I've never been particularly friendly with people of the 'collective' persuasion, and there's a great deal of truth to that, but I'll let you in on a little secret, I will always value competency and ingenuity as being of greater importance. So with that logic, Sera is no outlier."

"Fundamentally speaking, I'll never be able to truly trust a communist. It's a fact that even a paper moth could digest...but you know what? Maybe trust is overrated. I mean, she knows what she's doing, and she does it efficiently. So in a world where all we can really do is stumble through life's blinding sunbeam with at least some semblance of empathy...maybe that's good enough. Right?"

But it has produced for her godly, no, unholy weapons of war. She possesses a greater strength of arms than anything this world could muster, and her willingness to use them so freely is horrifying. I am not easily horrified, but the thought of what she can do, what she has done, chills my blood."

Huh, that's an one big gun in your hand. I hope that the recoil doesn't blow you back in the wall, haha. Anyways, let's check what this Kaiser is about.

It seems that he was raised by a strict military father - good to see that he has no daddy issues from those times and had a father figure, and by father figure I don't mean a male specimen who has become a drunkard. A military career... Khe khe, that's what you expect from most leaders here at this point. It seems that the fascists of his country were so cringeworthy that they managed to screw up wars and leave their country in ruins, and he managed to step in and put his dream form of government in place. Now, I have never had high opinion of those who idolize something from Germany, and the form of government of old Kaiserreich is no exception, even if "democratized". You are humble? Sure, keep telling that to yourself.

A Christian who rarely practices? Sounds like an agnostic or cultural Christian, really. Honestly, at first I expected him to be a strongman, but what I got was pretty disappointing. I can agree with some of it such as religion or strong military, but overall most of those are unbiased by the overall cringe. From his antis I share the hatred for nazis, but not much else. Also, I am not sure why math is stated along with political opinions he hates - sure, most of humans end up hating it during highschool, but come on!"

He enjoys reading history books? Good, very good, those usually have a lot of interesting stuff in them. And also someone who loves football and sports activities at the same time? Sounds like a healthy combo. Most of his gear could be said to be "generic PMT" stuff, but a whiskey flask being listed as part of "gear" is a big funny.

But is he not himself a form of code and hardware? The only difference is that his hardware is neurons and his code his life experience co fined with ingrained instincts. And after all, he was purpose-born to rule. Anyway, he is somewhat unusual for human leaders of his time period, most of whom acquired their positions via electoral systems or were self-appointed rather than being born into it. His willingness to personally engage in warfare is also atypical, something that one would expect to confined to early times. In general, he is a very interesting figure, one that is worth paying attention to. - Representative Nokosi
