While I do not want to provoke him, I do want to make clear in no uncertain terms that I disapprove of what he's doing. I mean, he's the kind of guy to make me admire militarism and nuclear weapons as a form of self-defense, and I've got to admit that's not really something I'd usually support. I just hope I haven't upset him too much and made myself a target, because of all my focuses defending against a nation such as his has never really crossed my mind before."

Welp, opinion incoming

"Now Zen has a lengthy history and one that will probably take me some time to fully learn and appreciate. But his support for gay equality is something I fully support and endorse, as are his protections for the environment. While some of his ideals I find a little sketchy at first glance, such as support for constitutional dictatorship, he seems a decent enough guy to be able to pull it off. And being immortal certainly helps keep his nation's business in capable hands."

Eugh, another fanatic with a tendency towards authoritarianism and a paranoid schizophrenic worldview. A regular ol' politician from these parts, in other words.

Seriously, this guy's as conspiratorial about the West as I am, except he thinks things used to be better. But that's what worshipping imaginary lines on some maps gets you, I suppose. You start thinking in terms of pictures, and so the Romanticist paintings of the days past begin to look a lot like photographs.

She doesn't really seem that much of a fighter either at first glance, but those who are up against her would definitely be in for a surprise from what I can see of her capability with a variable firearm.
