Welp, it might be too common, but in this timeline Gadjah Mada was wise enough not to insult a Sundanese princess, but rather to secure a personal union, expecting that Majapahit would be superior to Sunda and would become the leading part of the union.

All around, Greenwichian Arcadia, has developed like a more socially progressive and humanistic version of the United States from its starting years. For example, it preferred to co-opt and integrate native tribes in their westward expansion and even granted (and presumably enforced) all natives and former black slaves' full citizenship rights at the end of their Civil War.

Apparently, Palmeran neko are somewhat overshadowed by their more famous Japanese counterparts, which has spurred a bit of resentment on the Palmerans' part.

Awww!! Thank you so much! I don't think I've ever gotten that kind of reaction to it before! Honestly, I wish I could see it too. Maybe I'll try my hand at kalanta-style drawings someday, who knows? 🍷

Their official languages are English, Russian, and Japanese... I actually find this amusing as this is essentially the same demographic split as the original Godulan population (though the English part was a rough mix of English, American, and Aussie).

German Kongo has suffered a brutal 35-years Warlord Era on crack which resulted in its African native populace dying from starvation, disease, and war. Leaving a few German settlers to take over the reins and reunite the Congo.

The Consul (leader of the country) is isolated from their people and is responsible for vetoing laws and declarations of war. If the citizens feel like the Consul is abusing their power, they are tried and executed if found guilty. In addition to their usual roles, the Senate also handles diplomacy and the military while the Praetorian Court commands capital ships. The government doesn't really change much politically, as the society is too paranoid.
