Yes, I don't see anything wrong with the country, has a lot of sci-fi and fantasy elements in it so the landscapes are definitely gonna be interesting.

Highly democratic and freedom-loving population, what if Mongolia and Japan had a child who also has an Indian driving instructor, increasing tensions between Market Socialists and Maoists, eats the aeugh fish, pets the aeugh fish, Aruday metro train doors have a tendency to amputate riders

No. Although I can definitely think of worse places to live, by and large Sherachia seems like a rather poor nation of poorly-educated and lazy people.

Most certainly not. I have no interest in living in a corrupted state.

Hm, it's an interesting question. On the one hand, living in the "country" might mean attending university at Cambridge and being a classmate of Sophia, Oomiya-san, and Vivian! I'm fond of all three characters, so that could be a fun life, and plus I'd be Cambridge-educated!

On the other hand, it is 1868 England... suffrage is still rather a work in progress, the historical method is still under the guidance of Von Ranke's school of thought (good for its time, but much flawed from the vantage of 150 years of hindsight), and all manner of modern conveniences, like hygiene, plumbing, and medicine are a far cry off from where they are today. And if I have a long life, I unfortunately have the Great War and a global flu epidemic to look forward to...

Ultimately, I am afraid to say I would not wish to live in Sophia's England. Not because of Sophia—she is certainly the highlight of her nation!—but because it is, at the end of the day, still England in 1868. ^^;

Ninja'd.

Astoria is not a particularly extreme place, but its socialized healthcare and evidently even-handed approach to human rights (from what I can discern so far, acknowledging that much of the website is WIP) make me lean in favor of saying I'd be willing to live in Astoria.

Absolutely. I would love to go back to 2004, and Baizou seems like a fantastic nation to live in within that time period.

I wouldn't want to live in a country where politics is entertainment and the economy depends on one export only.
