"Just to think why a student terrorist is on the FBI's Most Wanted List despite only being active in Asia. I think it the possibility that the Black Cat doesn't exist, and is instead a myth propagated by more established radical elements of the movement should be considered. Terrorists aren't built from so called 'memers'. Generation Z isn't nearly motivated enough for it. I am under the impression the Black Cat is just a ploy for his movement to recruit young. His character, his reputation, his background, all depart from reality. The only believable part of his existence being the terrorist attacks themselves."
