Burning national flag?

If no damage was caused other than the flag then there is no punishment. If it catches light to someone else property then you will be charged for accidental destruction of property, which is 6 months - 4 years depending on the severity. If it kills someone then its involuntary manslaughter which can be charged with 10+ years in prison plus 2 for every other person that it kills.

If it is child abuse:

Disappearance, followed by secret torture, followed by public execution.

If it is simply a disciplinary spanking: Nothing, strongly encouraged.

Not a crime: Age limits for alcohol are exclusively concerning purchase, sale, and use in a public venue. Cannabis is regulated the same. Any substances with a consumption age limit are on a prescription-only basis, so "underage" is not relevant. Teens tend to have connections to the black market and/or the police, so, in the case of substances which are outright banned, it would often be the minor buying the banned substances for their parents.

Getting beat up by the locals, then getting questioned by police, depending on intent the punishment can be anywhere from a fine if done because someone else had you do it as a joke (then that person gets the prison sentence instead) up to a maximum of 5 years in prison.

Diversion is available for first-time offenders, though reckless endangerment charges may apply additionally. Subsequent offenses can entail suspension of license. Applicable punishments apply if there is any damage to person or property.
