Monkey 482, after taking inspiration on that, made a copycat party in his home country, got kicked out of the army for it, and was then murdered by one of his party members.

Monkey 481 was a big fan of 483, and after 483's death, 481 fled to Argentina to escape being punished for his war crimes. He was then bitten by a Jararaca and died the next day.

With inspiration of the ongoing Zombie Apocalypse Event.

#476 was a very smart monkey, even more than her husband and child, but not that curious. And she did not like boxes - both of them loved boxes. And cats.

"Humans and monkeys are strange", she said once.

"Afterlife could be the greatest paradise or the worst nightmare, with unimaginable sufferings.

How would life as an undead be? Are they alive or dead? The space between life and death is interesting. And the appeal of the idea of a life without a soul.

More so: People like the idea to imagine other ways of getting extinct than the real one, which could happen (hello global warming and sustainability crisis). As if this was a goal to achieve - getting extinct

Maybe sometimes people just want to imagine the world to burn and to be the arsonist.

"The space between life and death is interesting - probably nobody ever thought, that deaths of 10.000 monkeys in a genocide could be avoided and that stories could be written with the intention to avoid it somehow. But it has been thought and done several times by Teffland. Maybe people have not used their imagination enough, of the possibilities, the world gives them.

This here is the "Ten Thousand Monkey Genocide Avoidance Cannon", it lets the monkey, who shoots it, avoid the "Ten thousand monkeys" genocide, while fulfilling the task of being killed, without really being dead. And it gives all victims of the genocide a life - maybe an afterlife, which fits the rules. "

Whatever happened next maybe is unimaginable. I won't tell you. 🤖

Monkey 472 Found a bag of cocaine and mistook it for sugar. Colombian and Mexican cartels fought over his body.
