Being a stowaway constitutes a breach of private service, which is a minor crime, but can still put you in prison for a period of six months to a maximum of one year.

Since military training is part of our education system it has the same punishment as cheating on a regular exam by having to redo the exam on different date since the perpetrator obviously needs more time to prepare.

It is not a crime per se, however, social and private measures apply. For example, the driver would have every right to ask the person with the speaker to turn it off or get off the bus. If the passenger refuses to do either option, he can be legally removed by the police from the bus.

Not a crime. While not all provinces of America may respect Stand Your Ground laws, all of them recognize the Castle Doctrine, if someone tries to commit home invasion, they're free game.

Apprehending and the killing a police officer with an execution-style bullet to the back of the head after he was trying to break into your house without first providing a warrant. this is in fact not a crime in this country
