For the record, the Valiant is a tank that the director of the British Tank Museum in Bovington described as "If games depicted this thing as realistic the keyboard should electrocute you at random intervals".

Yes this tank was so shit actively tried to kill its driver.

Er, literally who? Coz it sounds like a certain other person with the wacko gen threads that ask crazy questions like "would you push a button that solves world hunger but there's no more tech" or something in that strange line of thought that completely deviates from a more practical question ("Operation Artemis" comes to mind), with an added story behind it that makes little sense, paired to them nudging and trying to convince the collective thread to reach an agreement on a forced outcome, then moving goalposts when that doesn't work...

... Which, while equally annoying, does get a little amusing at times. Even if it's a collective of people trying to debate with a brick wall and expecting an answer from a building on the other side of town.

I can throw a TG your way if you want, I'm pretty sure anyone who's dabbled in the military worldbuilding thread can tell you who it is.

Which reminds me, I should really get an actual RP started sometime soon.

Most likely, yeah. I would argue it's amusing when it's either poorly orchestrated homyposting, either on purpose or on total accident. Every other time? Either in a gray area, or somehow alright.

I'm guilty of that, so is everyone on here, but how it's orchestrated depends on, I suppose, if whoever is doing it is an actually good writer.

There can only be two types of characters that are partially self-inserts:

Fun and generally loveable people, who are a projection of what the user wants to be, or:

Depressed/evil/maniacal abominations who are more or less prevalent amongst less happy people on this site (Like my Alexandria for example).

Idc about homyposting per se. It's more on those who insist on posting un-PG13 stuff here. It's very possible to include it in an RP in a way very relevant to the overarching story.

Tbh everyone does it IRL, leaders as well, why not? It's not really a cliché, more of the norm.

Plus it's meant to make the leader look good, human, and positive.

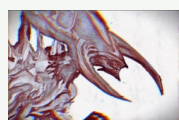

Nobody wants to stare at an image of their leader glaring at them as if they had committed several atrocities against the state and thus the leader's hatred is so pure that it even seeps openly from every last image of them.
