Legal, unless it manages to cause injury to a person. Though it wouldn't be legal to sell it. It has been contaminated.

If they consent to it, then go right ahead, that's your business. But if the other person loses interest in being the pet after consenting, they may use the law to get free.

Throwing a very fat thirty-pound cat onto your neighbor's roof with a trebuchet, shattering the roof, killing the cat and crushing one person in rubble. This occurs because the accused sleepwalked into the lever when the cat was resting in the cradle. It was their own cat and trebuchet, and the trebuchet had been left in place overnight by the accused.

1. Owner fined for misuse of a Trebuchet

There would be no way to Prove that the Accused put that Trebuchey there. As that could be Theft of Property I suppose. Maybe if there was camera evidence.

2. Fault will not be placed on the sleepwalker. Except for slaughter of the cat and the roof which will need to be fixed.

Oh, that will result in a minimum jail sentence of 50 years. Any person who has been permanently injured or killed from the action will immediately result in your timely execution, no take backs. Unless you were framed, then you'd be released with a massive compensation.

Going by dictionary definitions, no law exists that forbids or regulates being a "male donkey" or a "stupid, annoying, or detestable person". Therefore, in either case, not unlawful.
