"Mr. Sauer's power worries me. It is well known that he strongly dislikes progressive politicians, and I fear he will use his new powers to persecute them. Looking at his rule, I strongly dislike his Lebensraum idea. It would simply lead to other nations getting embittered, but I have to admit I admire his loyalty to his beliefs, no matter how bigoted, and how much people love him. Perhaps I will take some notes from his actions."

"His Grace has asked me for my professional opinion of the individual in this dossier; given the extraordinary claims made in the document, I suspect that this may be some sort of joke being played upon me, but I will nonetheless complete the task assigned to me to the best of my abilities. My analysis is that 'Ilia' is an efficient and able leader, who showed great adaptability in the aftermath of her former civilisation's fall. I admire her rational and systematic approach to her duties, and although she is encumbered by feelings of regret over the loss of her people's independence, she does not seem to allow those feelings or sentiment in general to interfere with her work. One thing that does strike me as odd is that in her assessment of His Grace she seems to assume liberalism and conservatism to be complete antonyms; I am not interested in the details of political ideology, but that seems to me to be an oddly American attitude for a supposed alien being from another galaxy to take."

"They ARE complete antonyms, especially when used in an unqualified manner such as in your leader's case. We can understand someone describing themselves as a 'Fiscal Conservative / Social Liberal' or 'Authoritarian Left', et cetera et cetera, but to simply say that one is a conservative liberal or a progressive traditionalist is to imply that the leader in question just says whatever is necessary to stay in power. Tiny things can have far-reaching ramifications, as you should well know." -Kal'Shazzar

You have a good point there. One reason is that space flights happen much less often, only about 5-10 times a year, than you driving a car to work or flying in an airplane. Since space travel has so many benefits to society that we wouldn't otherwise be able to get, then I think it's a worthwhile sacrifice. We can live without cars and airplanes though.

"While I do normally detest the same old tired tale of the righteous victim of oppression heroically rising up to liberate their subjugated homeland from brutal foreign overlords, I do find myself sympathizing with this First King. Not out of some naive support for his cause mind you, yet merely because I share a mutual disdain for the Rapture Republic. Any cause that aims to bring those accursed sea-dwellers any form of pain is one worth supporting in my view. The First King himself is relatively unremarkable, however. I am unimpressed by his feats in the revolt against Rapture, though I suppose they were significant enough to reestablish his nation's sovereignty. His policies enacted after the revolution seem to part of a commonsense plan to rebuild the war-torn nation, which is commendable, I suppose. Overall I view the First King as a competent-enough ruler, as well as one of the few rebels that I do not completely abhor. "

"You know what? I commend him for building and flying a strong nation. Despite his militaristic and disturbingly un-democratic seemingness, his way of order and organization is exceptionally potent for his cause. He is a steelstrong leader for his people, which is excellent of him, as his government's goal is that of the preservation of his people's culture and survival, just as my own government seeks to keep my own people safe and to spread our faith. That can be very difficult in the turbulent environment of an ununified species' planet. My only sincere hope is that he will not turn out to be a true tyrant, as so many others do given his same position.

Oswald's Mood: Lethargic

"The lack of logic is making me feel...lethargic more so than it does make me feel frustrated trying to understand this illogical narrative. Those series of unfortunate events somehow led him to attain godhood? For a self-described god the events that took place are stupid, and frankly I hate how stupid all of it is. But I am fearful that I might bite my tongue if this is what future generations aspire to be like: insane and... 'meme-y'. Ergh, saying the latter word is upsetting. If Herr Sauer possess any plan to prevent this sort of insanity, then I am more so inclined to support it to the fullest."

"The subject will be classified as high threat, extreme risk. My professional assessment is that their instability and capabilities can present a significant danger to framework assets. A liquidation squad should be kept at the ready, possibly even ready to sever the region. My personal assessment is to note the significant degree of animus directed towards the nation of Valentine Z and state that such obsessive animus strikes as overly zealous. If they feel threatened by a nation whose most destructive weapon is a flood of video clips involving cat cubs, I daresay the problem with Hammer." -Ilia

"'Queen of Assassins', scoffs she benefits from the ruler of her nation's foreign occupiers. Her role as an assassin who willfully obeys the will of her invader, going to the point where she agrees with Kal'Shazzar's motives, culminates onto a disavouring opinion of her and doubts to be raised towards her and the capacity of leadership she holds now compared to the power she once attained in her past. Ilia is everything as an assassin but not a 'queen' of them as people and herself claim; she can prove it by assassinating Kal'Shazzar, then I would find her worthy of such an alias. However—I doubt she would do such a thing since she partnered herself to that."
