Revisiting this, that is why I have never touched GA and SC before. I have done issue-writing, participation in multiple forms of RP (II, NS Sports, P2TM), issue-answering (comes with statistics!), and heck yes, even NSG for casual conversation.

But other than Silly Joke Proposals for the fun of it, I have never ever written a GA/SC proposal, and I don't think I will be doing it anytime soon. Same goes to Raiding and Defending, which is inevitably the only thing that is mandatory and everyone must participate, lest you get raided; though a password is more than enough for the most parts, and even then you get "Liberate [Region]" because I don't know, passwording a region seems like so much of an affront to the Gods. If you think NSG can get cutthroat, it's even worse somewhere else.

Rant over, sorry! ^^;

Oh yeah, as bad as NSG gets it never had (to my knowledge) actual attempted doxxing and shit...

Really makes me wonder why some people treat a funny text based browsergame like it's a fuckin esports final

I think calling for murder at all is trolling. You can advocate for the death penalty so long as you aren't exceedingly ghoulish about it, but NSG, in particular, has a serious problem about gloating over deaths and behaving without tact.

I feel a cliché that's never been brought up is how it's generally super easy to tell when an issue was written (if not added to the game, considering how long it used to take issues to actually get added to the game) based on what pop culture phenomenon or real world events/people are parodied in the issue.

I say generally because you have things like that one issue about illegal immigrants where one of the options is building a wall around your nation that's like issue 40-something, so it was one of the earliest non-Max issues and not a reference to Trump's border wall.

Deadass I think people should just start using RL references in issues.

It's honestly kind of eye-rolling to get an issue that has Edward Rump with his bad toupee and how he says things like 'yuuuuuuuuuuuge' or 'make [nation] great again', and just generally speaks like Donald Trump because it is Trump. Just say it's Trump, it's stupid to pretend that it's not.

At some points, I do go back to my original flag because nothing screams Valentine Z more than that green and pink flag. But there are times where I change colors like some weird mood ring/bracelet, or I just post a picture of a character I have created. :3

Or a favorite character, that works too!

To be fair the shit posted was pretty nasty, I'd want that removed as quickly as possible.

Following that...

I posted to a thread with the link to a leader I wanted to use... but for some reason, people still utilized the Board of Directors... I don't know why. Maybe I should have explicitly pointed it out but still.
