If you assassinated the People's Minister or Regent-in-Waiting, that would be charged with assassination and/or terrorism, and you would get life or death. If you assassinated the King, that's treason and is punished with death. Given historical assassinations, I should point out that the punishments only apply if found mentally fit for trial.

The crime for creating gulags is being rejected by ANI (for looking like communism), except for fringe nazbol groups, and rejection by all major left-wing unions (for authoritarianism).

My entire country is a gulag for workers, they don't have minimum salary, they only re charge battery 4 hours (the rest of the day is working), they don't have any act for their security, etc.

No punishment for this "crime of boycotting the transport system because bus seats hurt their butts." This issue was actually solved recently by making bus seats fucking comfortable. (I might not be the most civil right-freedom-loving country out there but we fix this shit straight up...)
