His opinion: (Respecting and Acknowledging the efforts of Estima..)

"A leader of a republic, that is rather informal to anyone he meets. A rather strange but welcoming aspect from a leader, normally one would expect the leader of a sovereign nation to be stoic and calculating to each of his or her actions. He however shows that feeling of humanity that a leader has and actually shows it to the people and proves that not every leader has to be showing a stone cold face. Oh and i admire his capabilities in his political efforts in statecraft along with the rather brutal stamping of corruption that runs in a nation's political infrastructure. I might consider requesting a state visit so that He and I can talk with matters that both of us find mutually interesting."

"Oho! Haven't you got tact now? So polite and proper to the good little potential ally. And yet I see in you nothing but a savage. You nearly killed a peer in school, so it says, and somehow that was just... overlooked. If you lived among a reasonable people you would've been whipped. Quite the little sadist you were as a child. And you've carried that attitude right up through the ranks! Haven't changed a bit from the little boy twisting the dagger in the shoulder of his classmates to the angry man lashing out at his betters with his tongue. I haven't forgotten what you said to Suurewie. Hrm, you 'busy yourself with issues that need solving,' just like that, huh? Like it's that easy to be such a workaholic. Never mind your... philandering. But regardless, moving on. You can claim to be a man of the people with one hand, and act the autocrat with the other, and no one cares. You can afford to be 'neutral' on war and no one cares. You can hoard immortality for yourself, something no man should have, and no one cares. And you can mask your sadism under the guise of 'trauma', conveniently dismissing its resurgence only when you've been slandered, and... no one cares. Good god, your people must be apathetic to your rule if they let you get away with all of that. Then again, they would have to be just to stand one of such little stature sitting upon their throne. A good king's crown, his dignity, fits the shape of his head, is propped up by his spirit. Yours dangles around your neck."

"Caller On The Council, Akhens-Ari. Did I say that correctly? Yes? Alright. Well, Akhens-Ari and I seem to have a lot in common. Both started as common people, both of us have military backgrounds, and both somewhat unexpectedly rose to power. That is where the differences end. She was, in some way, raised to be a warrior, whereas I was not. Ari started off actually important, but I did not. Akhens-Ari is very clever and powerful; if she was to be brought to today, and given our current knowledge, she would be a very powerful and great world leader. I respect Caller Akhens-Ari. I respect her very much."

Ellis is one of the better princes with a bit more of a chip on his shoulder to prove himself. He has a great personality and is very funny.

I also really like that he is a pagan. I believe in his ideas of love, but that doesn't mean he is a saint. His religion is a bit over the top in my experience. I don't know how he balances that with being a good prince and also a good adherent. Is he a heretic for not being one of the monotheistic religions? I don't know, but I doubt he cares

"Ah, Jake James. He's the quiet character, isn't he? He has done a lot to ensure those lowly peasants know their place! Good job on that, I shall give you a cookie, and that cookie is allowing me to make use of those assets to work in my factories to feed the ever consuming and wanting masses. I promise you, you will be a wealthy man. That's if, we can cut a deal, and ignore our physical differences for the sake of the coin.

"What do we have here, an autocratic despot? We haven't had one of those on Erudia in decades, that would be for the better—you are a criminal Jake—those who subscribe to your ideas are no more than obedient sheeple. You must think you're so clever, getting away with political intrigue, but what is that supposed to mean? That you were able to cheat a fair system is not worthy of praise at all. I doubt that there is one thing about you that doesn't reek of a conniving swindler. From the deception of the masses, your endorsement of mob lynching to political treachery—its not astonishing to look back at your early life to find that you were once a humble newspaper editor.

I have lived through these "Sigh" prejudicial sentiments, I've felt what it was like. "Somehow, Arthur Slick" blows Jake Featherstone out of the water in terms of pretentiousness, ego and being a knave in general. He doesn't sound like a pleasant man to be around and the fact I am appalled shouldn't be surprising, I was born in the Proletariat Union and never had to live through these so called selection pressures that capitalism dictates as fundamental to human nature. We are still competitive beings, you see that a lot in my line of work, but Arthur to be frank there is nothing "slick" about exploiting those in vulnerable positions—you're leading them on with the pretense of a better life— which should be a birthright not a persuasion tactic.

The manner in which you present yourself makes my skin crawl, you are an egotistical narcissist. You try too hard to come off as presentable, hoping in the back of your canine brain that people will uncritically and ignorantly swoon over your Charisma. It may work on the uneducated masses, but to me you're much more of a joke than the despot Jake. While that loser's circumstance is one of sorry ignorance, your pretense is a deliberate, conscious and self-righteous zeal toward the ruthless, unapologetic and systematic exploitation of other living beings. You must be really insecure of your position in life to feel the need to rationalize your disgusting, pain-inducing ideology.

Worst of all, and it isn't funny at this point, is how you live under the false impression that you're intelligent.

You might be book smart, but suppose you were truly intelligent in rationale and emotions, then you would have realized that machine labour and automation would make the sweat labour of people irrelevant. So why not delegate work to the machines? Then you could let your people live freely, giving them freedom and prosperity. Their happiness and contentment in life will give them no reason to plot an insurrection against your state, and so instead of wasting wasting much money and resources keeping people in line, you'd have this alien and totally foreign concept called trust. But because you are a selfish idiot, to put things plainly, you cannot trust anyone because you don't intend to help anyone beyond yourself.

Arthur, you're no more a woefully insecure aristocrat who craves exclusivity and privilege over the common folk. These are the people responsible for keeping the electricity running, the water flowing, to the janitors who keep your government facilities squeaky clean and hygienic. If put in your position, they'd contribute more to

"This marauding warlord in the malformed shape of a man believes mistakenly that one can forge unity from purges and mass bloodshed, and this marks him not merely as a murderer but as a fool. Humanity may be caught in the cycle of war and revenge, and may yet destroy itself as those in his time unfortunately did. But this 'Shephard' merely repeats the mistakes and past barbarism of those who preceded him, and all his half-baked rhetoric concerning the unity of a new race means nothing if he has already set an example wherein the most brutish and violent of his already prodigiously bloodthirsty species can claw their way to the top."

"In the madness and chaos of the wars that he will wage, cliques and individuals among his forces will inevitably rise from the same bloody ambition that he did and aspire to his position. Or better yet attempt to carve out fiefdoms and petty kingdoms of their own in the ruined world he is so intent on fashioning the moment he or his sorry ramshackle excuse of a government falters in duty or function. Even if he does succeed in stamping out what few embers of humanity remain in his doomed world his empire is still running on borrowed time for force of arms alone does not see a people through the ages. If he should fall to Miscal before he learns that lesson, then his successors surely will."

"I have read through your story, my friend Anatoly, and all I can feel for you is utter sorrow and sympathy. I have seen the horrors of war myself, and witnessed several battles in my lifetime. The Japanese were known as the most depraved of armies, willing to die for their Emperor, and yet when I saw one of my Water Monks pull up a Japanese soldier who had a hole punched through his stomach and out his back, I had felt the same things you did when you had shot that Westerner; nothing but sorrow at what that man could've been, where he could have gone with his life.

A good fight or spar in the dojo is all good and well, but war is nothing to glorify, no matter your weapon of choice. And to have all this anger against the world deep down, yet you keep it to yourself, and present yourself as a humble man above it all, and to have such discipline to keep yourself under control after all that you experienced makes you the strongest among most men of this world. I wish we could meet one day and speak in person... I could learn as much from you as you could from me."

But, that clock is ticking here, and the world needs cooler heads right now.

Oh yeah, back to you. Well, now you're a peacekeeper for Valentine Z. New responsibilities with a new crusade to save lives; I'm not sure if your inspiration is atonement for the past though, or if I'm just projecting. Either way, all victories come with calculated risks, and all come at a cost Shen; I'm just glad to know that you do your best to minimize this human toll."

The Great Air Domain: Uncle Sam's loving bully since July of 1947

Remember that flying saucer with strange lights you saw hovering over the sky? Of course you don't. That never happened. And if it did, it was Venus.

Q: "What inspired you to make this nation?"

A: "The answer is too crazy to sound true."

The sheer quantities of energy and material required prove to be inefficient compared to the vastly more sustainable alternative of centrifugal artificial habitats in space. As an engineer I would be most curious for your opinion regarding off-world habitation. Not to mention, your opinions surrounding "atomic weaponry" it confirms that the top secret research going into the Manhattan Project will bear fruit. Unfortunate one

He's a good strong leader, he knows how to lead a country, and it isn't authoritarian but it has strict security. I appreciate other technocracies and hope I could meet him more. Otherwise he looks ugly. He is so ugly it makes normal presidents flip. Well I don't know, I'm not some dashing fellow but Howard's got a bit of a lazy eye.
