Well, while the legion itself doesn't have any taxes internally, they usually make their neighbours pay taxes. And the neighbours don't really have a choice in that matter. So not a crime I guess?

If it's under the command of my nation's military, then it's legal? If it's other nations doing it, we don't really mind because our Information Technology sector is so advanced that we'll find out as soon as they pour the first foundation of concrete.

No state punishment but the casino has the right to sue you with the maximum punishment being 10 years of unpaid labour (definetly not slavery) to the casino

Since AN didn't state any crime, I'm going with this.
It will probably get you arrested and fined, plus covering the costs of any damages. I wouldn't be surprised if you where banned from entering the casino as well, but that's up to the casino itself.

Selling someone's personal DM's and other messages.

Completely legal. There are no internet laws as barely anyone uses the internet. You can sell child nudes while watching pirated movies while typing about how you'll bomb the capitol, and that's entirely allowed.

You'd have to pay a fine and have one of your hands chopped off for poaching.

AN: Not sure what you're asking, but the drinking age is 16 but you won't really get punished by the state for underaged drinking as villages make their alcohol and distribute it within their communities as they see fit.

She will probably engage in combat with lethal weapons, because she has no state security. Given that the perp will survive the attack (which is extremely unlikely) he may be charged with bribery, assimilation attempt or, worst of all, dishonoring actions which will lead to at least 30 years of prison/hard labor or death penalty. Or she can just order the perp to commit suicide- she does it all the time

Destruction of said license and a heavy fine followed by house arrest can last from a minimum of 2 months to a maximum of 10 months.

Hate speech

No such thing to be a crime. There is hateful speech, but that is not a crime.

There is either free speech in which one is held responsible for the lawfulness or unlawfulness of the results of that speech, or there is criminal activity. Criminal acts require intent and motive, for which anything you say can (and will) be held against you for any faux pas, tort, misdemeanor, crime, felony, or treason committed in respective court of opinion or respective court of law . Being hateful is seen as a character flaw of being too selfish or immature to participate meaningfully as a serious adult in society, for which there would be societal ramifications. But just speaking hatefully is not a crime.
