There are even regions dedicated to potential factbook topics - I like to write about my constructed language, and so I reside in a region for conlangers. Much better place to get feedback on my conlang than a functional wastebasket.

I've yet to see a worldbuilding region that doesn't focus on building an overarching plot (i.e. here, where I've stashed a puppet) that manages to provide effective and focused literary criticism. f7 is more of an "rp lite" forum imo.

And by RP Lite; you mean this?

Yes. Writing one line is perfectly acceptable if you've taken time to at least tried to read some of the user's work, but having summerposters writing things that show surface level understanding (or worse, no understanding at all) is definitely frustrating.

A common misconception is "Valentine Z is a nation controlled by a robot", which.... is technically correct, but not the truth. 🤖

Valentijn is a person, Clarissa is a robot that takes charge of smaller regions, but Valentijn is the leader in all the affairs and stuff. It's these little things that differentiate a summerposter and an effort-poster, though I will admit that Val Z's lore is convoluted, anyway. 🤖

On the topic of summerposters, in one of those mem threads, I would spend like half an hour on one mem. Then some schmuck literally does someone random stuff, and then has THE AUDACITY of saying that they were /stillme or whatever.

I think it's fine to /stillme

That, or "HAHA WE DESTROYED EZ SKILL ISSUE" is also generally a shitty thing to do. Like listen dickhead, my nation is not a means for you to show of how sTrOnG your mary-sue powerwank military is.

I don't even mind that if they can justify it, but 90% of the time those posts have them just beating on a vaguely defined straw target with the actual Above Nation nowhere to be found. It's always:

Haha pathetic weaklings. We massacred all of them rather than:

Their [forces described in factbook] were brave, but our [forces described in factbook] still massacred all of them, because [reasons].

See I have a puppet that's literally based on a long-running kids anime franchise and how the fuck am I supposed to actually write lore for that beyond 'Yeah if you wanna know more about these characters literally go and watch all 842 (soon to be 843) episodes of this franchise that's been airing since 2004 and is much more popular than a lot of Western weebz think?
