"Well, it's been a while since I did one of these. Let's see who it is..."

Oh, Yunru? I believe I have heard that name float around a couple of times. Odd that it took this long before we came across each other properly. If memory serves me correctly, you were a former Chinese scientist working a lab in Kashmir (odd, I thought Kashmir was part of India) before the base was attacked by the Soviets, after which you found out the world had pretty much been taken over by brainwashers and from there you set up a base in Alaska to fight back. But I'm not here to recount your and Foehn's history, I am here to state my opinion.

*First of, I just wanted to state that I do believe you're fighting the good fight. The last thing any sane person want is the world to be under the control by simply one man. That being said... I am not sure I agree with your methods. I understand that the situation is extremely challenging and that the fact allies could be brainwashed at any moment if you're not careful poses a great threat. However, I believe you're too paranoid for your own good. You're practically overworking yourself just because you're doing tasks others could be doing simply because you don't trust anyone, for god's sake! You also seem to be *very* trigger happy when it comes to executing people you suspect of* being brainwashed. I am not sure if I like the way you're handling things right now. If you perhaps dropped your guard just a little, you could probably run the paramilitary far more efficiently.

"So..uh..Alexander, like the telephone guy? You're a dream come true for progressive reformers; I don't work with senators, but I always had the idea that they were clique-ish greying individuals that are hard to convince, let alone herd into a camp. But you did that with seemingly no effort. Why is that? The down-to-Earth electoral campaign? The media spin?

Don't get me wrong, I guess you're as good as leaders in liberal democracies get: not forgetting about the little guy, staying in touch with the needs of the common people, seeing your nation's interests first, and all that. But..if you got your assignment that quick, despite you being a newcomer and a member of a stigmatized community..then damn, I imagine your policymakers are in a bad state. And that means your system has noticeable faults to turn to you that quickly. Or rather, uh, people are superficial and you are so young and stylish. I bet that a lot of people voted for you for your looks.

Once again, don't get me wrong, you're a skillful guy for getting to where you are. That's not bad in and on itself and the idea that a middle class everyman can rise to be the representative of a nation is good; but I feel uncomfortable with that aspect of democratic politics, it seems more like a popularity contest at times. It's a million times better than arbitrary autocratic rule, sure, but, eh.

But hey, at least your skills to actually implement your policies and wrangle with the Senate will be put to the test, and, ideally, your people will decide based upon outcomes.

Also, your politics and systems seem a lot like the USA's despite being an analogue to the Dutch, weird. And this is coming from a space alien. Oh, and the military boost to protect your interests in strategically vital zones is predictable and rational, but a bit suspicious morally..and this is me saying that, not my guards here in Sverdlovsk.

Well, hello there, my little friend! I am Clarissa Alanis Star Samantha, among many other names, but you can just call me Clarissa, haha! I hope you are also having a great day yourself! I have heard quite a fair bit about you - from both the database that I am able to access and have regarding you, along with of the other Valentians who have interacted with you. I will have to say, it does seem like you have had quite a cordial interaction with those who have taken you captive! I mean, guess it is relatively normal for the people to be a little shocked by the discoveries that they have made regarding you, but hey, that's also the reaction of some people towards me because I am, very apparently, nearly impossible to exist by design and nature! Ah, it's their loss, haha. It's not the Valentians, of course; just other people. Anyway, enough about myself, so sorry! By cordial, I mean like they at least didn't dissect you, or go for your organs, and the like, if you know what I mean. I do also very much applaud that subtle threats to you and your crew backfired because hey, never back down like that! I do am happy that you have made do with whatever you have going on with the new folks around you, and I mean, even if the jobs tend to get a little too... destructive, you know? Maybe one day you can give my friend Gwen a challenge with the flying and the like. I think you two will have a bit of a good time, haha! Either way, I think my opinion on you so far is pretty positive! You seemed pretty pragmatic, and you are very quick-witted to be able to get out of practically any situation. So I think that is a pretty great thing to do and to have!

"I can appreciate her mixed economy policies and her anti-interventionist foreign policy. However, unfortunately such appreciation is overshadowed by the lack of human decency enforced by her in her country. The banning of clothing and banning intercourse in private. A disgusting social environment. Think of the children of her country, imagine the effect such things will have on their minds and innocent souls as they walk down the street and see adults having intercourse in public and everyone walking with their privates out on display, thanks to their perverted brain dead leader. She has made it criminal for her people to make love in private. I cant even imagine the grave danger she has put the women of her country in as dangerous men can gaze at their uncovered bodies with ill intent and can easily act on such ill intent in front of everyone due to the policies of Frasch. Despite all this government sanctioned debauchery, she has the audacity to declare herself a diety and made it compulsory for citizens of her nation to pray to her. She is a deranged, shameless oppressor, and a vile one at that. The only relation we can have is one where one of our female Razakar arrests her and has her hung on charges of social indecency, child endangerment, public nudity, endangerment of women and oppression of the masses"

Mr Klaus is truly a visionary in regards to the rulership of his state (despite his unfortunate lack of correct ideological thought), and I must respect our shared background despite his own individual flaws.

While it is so hard nowadays to find a contemporary in regards to torture (the weak powers opposed to the glorious legacy of Karamizo Frylov of course disdaining the trust form of art), I believe that Klaus would prove quite interesting in this regard, although now that I have finished musing on the concept of personal interaction I must condemn his failure to centralize power to any meaningful degree.

I mean, really, the allowance of a branch system is perhaps the least egregious of his mistakes in this regards, especially when compared to a system in which he is appointed by individuals who, rather obviously, could agree not to do so. In addition, as if he has no concept of how to deal with the matters of state, he has allowed a court to “interpret laws”, and while he at least has the foresight to ensure he appoints officials to this structure, it still has the potential to become a nest of dissidence in what would otherwise be an relatively secure government.

Still, though, I wish him the best of luck in his efforts, if only for the fact it’ll distract the world from our own.

"Ever since I made contact with the new dimension, I was dumbfounded by the idea of nations being based on or motivated primarily by religion. It is something I studied in Basic History classes, when I had but a few years of age. The notion of religious nations was as outdated and distant as, in human terms, the discovery and mastery of fire. It has been a most interesting experience, to able to witness such national entities work in the modern day. This extends to Arslan, I can only imagine how... odd it must be to live like that. Despite all he's done, he's still stuck to the limitations of his prejudice, which come from religious conservatism

Also, in his biography, it is stated that he is 'anti zionism'. I've been hearing that word a lot around certain human circles, and I wonder what it means. Primarily, the word is heavily associated with... well, I think I shouldn't continue. The neutrality towards democracy and secularism also somewhat amuse me. Humans can be quite funny sometimes, and despite his personal achievements and interesting traits, I can't help but merely think of him as a yet another example of odd human religiosity."
