"While I don't agree with his majesty n everything, he is generally an impressive leader who has done much good for the Kyrian people. Indeed, I would even say that his policies have succeeded in implementing a form of fascism suited for Kyrian culture, which is certainly praiseworthy. It is always nice to find a fellow leader who isn't a communist tyrant or capitalist stooge, and I wish Alexander all the best in his future efforts."

"Fascism... that monstrosity created by those, who wish to undermine the very fabric of humanity and completely obliterate the very concept of love, kindness, friendship, freedom and equality, and replace them with greed, cruelty and misery for all but a small fraction of population, who will feed on the innocent blood they spilled. And it's our duty to fight it wherever it emerges!

It's a shame, that Italy, such a beautiful country became spawning ground for this all corruptin' vile ideology. Italians! Rise up, and throw off the shackles of Enzo's tyranny! Rise agaisnt fascism and we shall aid your liberation! May gods guide your bullets and sharpen your blades! "-Shawn Bjornson

There seems to be very little information on the Duce beyond a few biographical tidbits. Judging by what's available, he seems fairly respectable, serving his country with pride and honour as all true leaders must do. He's a "fascist", but that term has been so diluted over time it's hard to tell what exactly he means by that. I more or less consider myself one too, though I'm almost certain our views of fascism are very different. I think it would be safe to say he's more of a "classical" type, strictly defining himself by Mussolini's ancient doctrine, while I chose to evolve it into something greater.

Shawn:

“Ugh. So much nonsensical anarchist drivel, I almost feel sick. I do wish Shawn would keep his poor excuse of a worldview to himself, instead of spreading it like a plague wherever he goes whether by obnoxious preaching or by force. At least that might give me an excuse to tear his limbs off. See how free he is then. My opinion on him remains more or less the same - he has no drive or purpose beyond freedom for its own sake, and it's honestly pitiful. He's like a wild animal, if animals could spout annoying tirades about rights and liberty.”

"This man is everything I hate. He's a degenerate subhuman, and he's also a Communist. Admittedly, it could be said that those two are synonyms, but I digress. I wish his mother was euthanised before he was born, is all I have to say. While I'll have no time for Khoron-thingy or any of their representatives, I will grudgingly admit that the management of his realm is somewhat efficient. I feel that our views on how a state should be run on the social level align, with the totalitarian grip we run our lands with. He recognises that such a rule is not to be ashamed of, but celebrated. Nothing is worse than the mob mentality of these so-called 'democracies'. But nonetheless, his foreign taint cannot be tolerated. We have more pressing matters on our hands; let's face it, we always do, but I do hope I can one day get round to putting down this mad dog.

"In a world engulfed by these manchildren who believe so strongly in their pitiable nations, it is great to see a man of actual calibre take the stage for once.

Kyria is, by all means, not perfect, but who is? Alexander is an exceptional lad. He somehow has mastered the art of governing a sort of 'democracy' with a steady hand, and allowing it to flourish and not cave into the pressures of Liberalism.

Indeed, a commendable individual. I'd advise him to not grow complacent, however. The tolerance of some degrading activities in his nation is especially worrying to me. It would be most distressing to me to see the beautifully carved gem of Kyria to fall because they were too tolerant. However, despite his shortcomings, this young King... wait, he stopped aging? He's actually hundreds of years old? Subhuman, pagan filth!"

Released to all international

"Hm. For an overly reactionary monarchist, I can find Sarkos to be quite a bit of an agreeable fellow. His ambition to ensure his survival and reign, his intolerance of degeneracy and Liberalism, his unwillingness to tolerate the scourge of democracy.....Really, I could go on quite a bit. He is far from a terrible ruler, despite my disagreements on some fronts. If he was an elective monarch, I'd quite prefer him."

Zen appears no different from your standard homosexual liberal monarchy with the slightest exception that his coming power is by appointment and not by inheritance to the dictator's throne, also, that he dresses like a peasant and not a high school athlete which is common for those "monarchies" but otherwise. There is little in disagreement with his policies besides his advocacy for mindless warring and his hate for the Jewish people for whatever reason that may be but overall, my opinion regarding Zen is neutral.

But I guess, he won't. After all, his patriots read his posts and may wrongfully think, that he became softer and weaker if he says nice things. Or that's just my suspicions without any logic basis? Time will show. Either way, I am so glad, that he doesn't even plan to commit war crimes against my people. After all, Grand Festival is a pretty bad time to have a war... "So, here we have some sort of vampire playboy who hangs around time and space being diplomatic, was a slave once, and lets the legislature do everything. I mean, if we had him here I wouldn't complain much, General Montemaggiore is a massive pain in the ass because he's always calling for referendums to ignore The Commission and do whatever he wants, but I'm going off the rails here. Look, I won't say I precisely like Phoenix, after all he's in my opinion, way behind my league, but he's level-headed and tolerable, so I'll let all his faults slip by my fingers and ignore them"

Oooh, my little friend! My little Japanese friend from the wonderful world of Stanier! Haha, it has always been a pleasure for me to see you! I know, I know, I have seen and read through all the files! I am not particularly fond of your views on the world, but my little friend, there comes a time when we have to give each other a little hug, and just remember that everyone and everything are nice! We are all wonderful and lovely people and beings in the hands of the Fate, and we must all be loving towards one another! So for that, I am neutral on your views, but I'll still give you a nose boop!

General Valentijn seems like a weak leader who can't hold his liquor. I've forgotten the way to the bar again, is it five feet to the left or right?
