Take a drink every time you check someone's factbooks and their national leader is in their early 20s.

Finally a cliché I'm not guilty of! Although to be fair staying in my twenties forever would be nice: you can balance work and life by sacrificing sleep, you might still have naïve beliefs and feel strongly about ideals, and you can actually find joy in what you're doing. I'm honestly dreading the day I reach thirty and settle for boring OL life, wrinkles, and actually experiencing the consequences of sleep deprivation.

Ugh. Imagine being an adult. No thanks!

I mean your leader is at least an absolute monarch, a monarch being young is at least not as eyebrow raising as 'Here's our leader he's 23 years old, served in the military for 5 years, has a Masters in political science, diplomacy, and foreign relations, has been a Member of Parliament for four years, and won election with 78% of the vote and is our most well-loved leader with 89% approval rating!!!'

You know for all the rabid hate that North Korea has for Japan, there's a lot of similarities between the North Korean cult of personality and the Empire of Japan's view of the Emperor has being a living god.

As a random historical fact, there was this time where N. Korea tried to mix the ashes of multiple people and pass it off as the remains of a few of the Japanese people they kidnapped.

As for the relevance of it all, I found it funny that N. Korea tries to pass off their own science and yes, they actually tried to negotiate with Japan back then.

I don't really want this tangent to go on much further (cuz it's not really relevant to NS Clichés) but fun reminder that Kim Jong-un's late mother, Ko Yong-hui, was born as Takada Hime in Osaka, Japan to a Korean father and Japanese mother, meaning Kim Jong-un is of Japanese ancestry.

It's ironic considering that North Korean society is really big on how pure and clean the Korean race is and they treat North Koreans of Japanese ancestry as being the lowest of the low in their caste system that totally doesn't exist at all everyone in North Korea is equal do you really believe that.

The East Asian history can get pretty complicated, which - to make it a bit more relevant to the topic - is why there are tropes or clichés that either oversimplifies the interaction of Korea-Japan-China relationships, or is complex and is aware of the all the inner workings.

I destroyed anime and any possibility of Cool Japan in my setting. The Soviet-Japanese Border Conflict erupts into a full-scale war and the Kwantung Army gets its wish, barely "winning" a war in the Russian Far East because logistics is hard and the Soviets were bottlenecked in the region.

Then the Soviets roflstomp Japan in the early 1960s anyways. I envision them propping up a friendly China and an entirely unified Red Korea but I can't decide if taking Hokkaido would be too much, it probably is: the Soviets were more historically interested in Europe. I've seen PRs of Hokkaido several times in alt-his here and elsewhere though.

Either way, Japan is an ultra-nationalist hugbox and rump-state more akin to Best Korea in the Palmeras-verse.

No Sino-Soviet split and unified strong Joseon is great, but I wish for red Japan too.

Most of the hatred is usually stirred up by politicians on both sides- usually right wing and fascist politicians (they collaborate so often I'd argue the LDP is basically one step from fascistic) in Japan and nationalistic right wing ones or centre-right liberals (although even social democrats warmonger from time to time) in Korea. However, ordinary Korean and Japanese hate their local politicians more than someone from another country.

Another cliché: overuse of military acronyms that most people don't know in mil RP.

I'm gonna do a satire now. I'll be GIGGLE the FUKASE in the DED in which the HUH follows BIBLE through procedure. That case the HEMOGLOBIN binds with the heavy weight VIGN so that the CAPILLARY could charge up its Railgun. The perfect POOP could then be generated through the automated AI FART. That way KHAN protocol could be morphed with MOM so that turning every iterative step could properly follow from each other. JOKE is optionally applied to properly counter any DEADPAN systems the enemy may try to counter with this configuration of XENO.

Baizou and Las Palmeras probably know a lot more about this than I do- so please correct me if I'm wrong-, but I'd argue there are still noticeable differences between their cults of personality. For one, the Kim family is not seen as "godlike" but closer to how Americans might see their "founding fathers": patriotic people who can do no wrong leading their nation to success. Much of the rhetoric in DPRK such as "Paektu bloodline" or "Descendent of the sun" emphasise their leaders are generally human except the fact they lead because their family created modern Korea.

That'd depend on how much I can make the Kōdōha faction mis-manage the Japanese economy and how much the WS can strategically cripple Japan. Leftist revolts backed by the Soviets and flared up by decades of dissatisfaction and a looming threat of starvation seems more believable than seaborne invasions, even if it's less flashy and a bit slower.

You probably know more than las palmeras and baizo on this. Korea and Jipan has culture in which family is held in high regard. Those family who took a intrigral part in the revolution are held in high regard. Buddism tend to give good fortune to family who sacrificed ans take hardship for other people. Monks is a symbol in which people undergo in which to ensure good luck for your family. The difference in values is a cultural thing and the Kims being the leader of the revolution of the Koreans utlimently mean the placement of the family in political power in korea. In the west, the individual is devorced from collective identity such as family and knows no honor. Individual achivement is viewed so that's why George Washington's family does not hold political power today.

Baizou's your hope. I made rough comparisons based on meems. I was in a seminar on the Cold War for a year but most of what I know about North Korea ends in the 1960s. The elder Kim did seem to promote the Stalinist-esque cult of personality after the August Faction Incident though. I don't know when the whole "divinity"/"purity" shtick occurred, if it ever did.
