"I admire her military service to her nation--I was never qualified to join the armed services for...reasons, and I hold those who take up arms in the highest respect. I do not understand why she is kept in golden chains and imprisoned in her...palace, isn't it? Being a leader does figuratively bind you, but to take these chains and make them physical, while heavily symbolic, must be a significant strain to her mental health. I wish her the best."

Oswald's Mood: Critical

"For one who called me 'too uptight', Fritz is too ambitious pursuing major leaps in technological and infrastructural advances without taking into account the consequences of milking his empire's GDP dry in the process. Being too full of ambition and being quick-witted does not constitute a powerful leader—advice he possess more shrewdness; evidence of his heavily-modified Auto is not something a Kaiser, wielding the responsibilities of ruling an empire, would do."

Still, as much as I despise n—rs like Cooper and the capitalists who them, like Chambers, I hate the people who started the nuclear war even more.

But Cooper is my target for now, she and her regime epitomize everything that led to America's collapse in my timeline. From unbridled capitalism to using minorities to put the white man. And, despite the fact they run a post-apocalyptic gang, they somehow go on moral tirades about how I'm a 'thief' despite the fact that I don't even decide the taxation policies of the RCAS, the citizenry do. A government run directly by the tax-payers isn't theft. But then again, we're talking about robber barons and the slobbering, braindead negroes who follow in their wake.

The Statement on Shawn

"So he's the one ruling after the council got tired and went for a vacation... Not gonna happen there, obviously. Anyways, he seems like quite an interesting person."

"He has quite a fighting history in North Korea - congrats to a some nation for finally giving a bonk on the head of that nation's leader, because it is too psychotic even for most of dictators. From his description he indeed seems like more artificially created supersoldier, because it is unlikely for someone to be naturally possessing those traits all at same time, especially when being an "ideal Skyhookedian". His hedonism and laid-backness definitely shows, though. He really sounds like a choleric with the whole "fast to piss off but also fast to forgive"."

"Not much is known about his political views, but "starting a new era" doesn't tell too much, does it? Making allies is always good, as you can never have enough of them. At least he has got a cool bat with spikes and runes, along with a shotgun. Although, why would you need those if you can survive even if charging at enemies only with sturdy iron?"

"The dude's "Chaotic Good"? Some of our Zoomer members of Youth wing know a thing or two about D&D alignment system, and from what we have heard, Chaotic Good is not always good for a stable state, but perfectly suited for an adventurer. We wouldn't say that we are good, but judging by its methodology, it would probably place us somewhere in "good" spectrum just because we aren't supporting egoistical cause. Right now, we aren't the most positively minded on this dude, because of vast differences."

"his early life has been nothing short of tragic, to say the least. one can wonder just how different he would have been had life not been cruel. but, sometimes a tragic start can harden you to the future ahead, and it seems like it has done the job, albeit also made him a bit on the crazy side at times. i definitely approve of his economics ideology being against capitalism, and there are certain aspects of it which are quite unique. the whole fast life idea has its own merits and concerns, and it is not something i would personally agree with entirely, but that is his way of thinking, and i ultimately respect whatever walk of life anyone wishes. Overall, personally, i have no problem with Konrad. there are some things that i agree with, others that i dont, but we are all different in some way. what matters to me most is how i am treated by them, and Konrad has done nothing to me to have any negative view on him."

The Statement on Anatoli

"He seems to be more similar to those "new left" we keep hearing about in the west, rather than old styled socialist. Sometimes we wish that some of particularly individualistic hags there could get an old fashioned dictatorship, so they finally would learn to respect the government in crisis. Anyways, back to this dude, then."

"A middle class man who graduated with master's degree in political sciences... We thought that those weren't a particularly wise investment, especially in age of STEM subjects. His rise in social democratic party seems a bit like hijacking the party, considering how social democrat views are usually different than his "libertarian socialism" shtick. Anyways, it is unfortunate that the liberal-conservatives he ran against hadn't separated church from state already, although they perhaps might have been less liberal than him."

"Now to political views... environmentalism, secularism, looking outwards in space, and welfare state? We could perhaps get along there. That said, we find the overt progressivism, along with lack of patriotism, the enforcing of vegetarianism, and anti-militarism stance as cringe. Although the harm of automobiles and airplanes is unfortunate and should be fixed, banning automobiles and airplanes is a no-brainer, unless you have green alternatives at the table already. Just don't get to authoritarian strings once your whims aren't followed."

"Personality-wise, he seems quite active outdoors and a healthy person - we like it. Overall, our differences are still too great to get along, and we are going to leave it as that."
