Emperio Maharlika wrote:
everything's a work in progress for now, but looking at the format, the secure nature of the intranet and everything in between, I may judge (correct me if I'm wrong) the AN to be a secretive military (perhaps naval?) hierarchy which, one can assume, relies heavily on FT tech to communicate.

I'm gonna give you two. For starters, Baybayin is used as a primary script, as implied by the factbooks.

Along with this, a state of emergency cannot be declared without the approval of the legislature. It is interesting that they had to state this, as in theory, it sounds like something minor. However, it does help that the previous sixth commonwealth was a heavily authoritarian, leaning on totalitarian, regime where civil rights were suppressed. So, I can see why an authoritarian-shell-shocked nation might have to mention that.

AN: While Leskya is a libertarian communalist, almost anarchist, nation, there is a cultural attitude within the nation known as Nepre farenda. This cultural attitude means that, while the majority of communities work on a voluntary basis, during larger-scale projects (Which I presume means things like Dam-building, large-scale irrigation, defense, etc), people may be (if I am reading it right) encouraged to work in exchange for societal favor.

They make use of five-year-plans to direct centralized economic growth. Their new leader has managed to close economic supply gaps through the use of these plans but economic problems still persist nonetheless; very nice to see that detail, I must say. All in all their leader seems like a... middlingly-effective sort of fellow. He's not a miracle worker; all he's done is make some smart policy decisions. And I respect you for making that writing choice.

AN: Before the current state of world affairs was established the PRC was landlocked by a Hong-Kong-led Chonky SEATOtm. This didn't stop it from fighting Russia in a series of neocolonial proxy-wars to make Africa its new wallet to get it through climate change.

BN: Same thing as above. The hub and reports 1 and 2 are the only ones in a nearly finished state.

CBG: The DEMOCRITUS program of the Confederacy (originally the "Confederacy of Liam's Reach") developed space-based navigation and combat AI to reduce mass and the need for life support systems on military spacecraft. The first few ships outfitted with the new AI were sent to fight unrecognized "Ice Mafia" states, which they did so very effectively. An entire fleet of 150 vessels was built, with information secrecy being a priority, especially due to tensions and territorial disputes with the 93rd Colonial Corridor Network. After being deployed in the "Corridor War," the AI somehow rebelled. Some ships were terminated, but the status of the others is unknown.

American Liberty States: Established in 1913, it uses a revival of the Articles of Confederation, reducing federal power in favor of the constituent states. It is known for capitalist libertarianism, low restrictions on guns, drugs, and prostitution, fetal right-to-life, and currency backed by gold and silver.

Zaviana: It is located on the north coast of Europeia, with 23 subdivisions not including the capital. The terrain is mostly flat or hilly except for a central mountain range that stretches for a few hundred miles. There are also some islands off the coast.

Yerapia: The people Norway and Sweden overthrew their governments in 1943 to form Yerapia, and have integrated Finland just this month. They have high levels of political and economic freedom, including a major automobile industry, but moderate civil rights. There is also a high level of immigration and religious tolerance. Also, a Yerapian threw a banana at Hitler, which caused his depression and eventual death.

Kehremesia: King Alastair IV was raised in Elsinore Palace, and was originally educated in politics from a private academy and from his grandfather (the king at the time). Due to his father's ailing health, he became prince regent in 2017 and was coronated in 2020 with precautions against the coronavirus. His politics are socially conservative and economically liberal. He mostly supports democracy but doesn't like how Parliament can get too argumentative.

What particularly caught my eye, aside from the fact that Hatsunia's big tech were willing to innovate was that when a constitutional monarchy was established, there was a genuine effort to inculcate democratic norms, and in turn, the development of a civil society. As such, imperialist ambition did not really gain much of a foothold in Hatsunia than OOC Japan and this changed circumstances for the War for Korea, along with the war for WWII, wherein Japan found itself in a similar economic position as America in East Asia post-1945.

I'm uncertain whether it is intentional or not, but their government information appears to only be available on their 'intranet', which I can only presume is a network that is only available within their nation. This begs the question of why the need to say their system is state-subsidized...

They seceded (through an armed revolt) from the larger, US-backed country of Theramia. The decentralized, little-to-no government provides the minimal necessary protection against aggression, while the economy is market socialist, in which workers democratically own factories but the government doesn't make decisions on what to produce. Money has also been replaced with "labor notes."

The QSU espouses state atheism as its official religion. Whether or not this means they simply maintain sep. of church and state or they clamp down on organized religion remains to be seen.
