"I can certainly admire his commitment to his cause - a just cause if what little information there is can be extrapolated. His usage of the electoral system instead of immediate outright violence is sensible and intelligent, an excellent reflection of character. Though, the same cannot be said about his driving ability - you must not drive whilst distracted, that is a simple rule that can be applied to any vehicle in any country - and it does not bode well for a future leader to repeatedly crash their car because of foolish actions. Aside from this - albeit rather glaring - fault, San Horo seems like an excellent future leader for Sherechia, though I must warn him that charisma and theory will only get you so far - pragmatism always trumps dogmatism." - President of the Confederation Siegfried de Vries

"I can understand her anger when it comes to the political system she lives under, but the way to solve that anger is not by becoming an envious, petty criminal. When you resort to criminality all you are doing is keeping the current political system entrenched, by diverting good people who could well oppose it towards actions that will only inflame the broad masses of the people against you. It is sad to see anyone - especially someone who was so young - be taken advantage of by evil men." - President of the Confederation Siegfried de Vries

"Franco is a committed man, I can respect him for that. However, I cannot say I could not resist the temptations of vengeance against those who had acted viciously against my people. Perhaps, it's due to me not being religious and therefore, I wasn't taught the ways of forgiveness and moving from the past, and towards the future? Hmm. Nevertheless, Franco has risen up the ranks that man like myself could not do, and served his adopted homeland well, and stood against the impurity of tyranny that seeks to snuff out the beacon of freedom and democracy. That I am far too familiar with in from my old world that was just corporate-sponsored oppression and even here in the new world with the Empire that is no better, and is just the state pushing the boot on one's neck. But regardless, in my time here, my companions and the people I've met that would forge the Federation and be the light of hope. Giving the people the right to choose who represents them, and have a chance to strike back against the Empire's bloody doctrine. Overall, I'm positive on Franco, and it is a shame that there where those who failed see his vision in freeing this Vietnam from hands of brutal despots."

Viktorina, Germanian Empress

"I read that this...remarkably young Akitsushiman Prime Minister is a reformer that possesses grand ambitions and good intentions for his eastern domain. This is fine and good, Yet unfortunately most of the information this document has gathered upon his person revolves around his disdain for homosexuals. Far be it from one of my time to lay criticism to this outlook, their camp is not mine to inhabit and most of my government and social strata likewise deem sodomy as immoral. Yet his case simply seems petty, and he seems only to oppose it given that his brother is at the head of their movement rather than for any kind of actual moral opposition...How shameful and depressing on his part, one should treat their brothers far better than that."

"At any rate, I anticipate more information so that I might make a more comprehensive and fair analysis of the boy, and perhaps actually analyze his achievements."

Viktorina, Germanian Empress

"My, isn't this a storied one...A man of the far, far future. This ought to be a fascinating tale, albeit one rather muddled by its liberal use of paradoxicalities in introduction. But c'est la vie, those are a favorite of storytellers no matter the era and the contents have my attention nevertheless."

"A man of five minds, each possessing high knowledge and education in specific fields of the future sciences that remain only theoretical for us in this marred, unfortunate era. An anomaly down to his very origins, and a man whom philosophers and church scholars of any terrestrial religion would have no end of debate, fascination, and likely revulsion for. I myself am greatly interested in just how a being with more than one simultaneously conscience could even function, but I have the feeling I really should leave that concept to the academia. That oddity aside, I can at least understand some of this material. Driven by a rather esoteric goal to unravel the secrets of the cosmos, he was able to break free of the collective imposed upon him by the society he was born into and driven to pursue his goals independently. In his freedom however, he ultimately aligned with an enemy of his society, and was...reprogrammed by them upon their discovery of his apparent treachery. And then made to serve them again after having his memory and very being erased...To be made a simple drone after having broken from constraint, that is too horrific for words to properly express."

"Fortunately after a change in leadership wherein a sane individual took the helm in his collective, his original self was restored. Albeit still to some degree constrained, he is his own being again and is able to serve his people as a willing administrator. One quite benevolent compared to the predecessors that tore his soul out and stuffed something else inside. I wish him well in guiding that far off fragment of humanity he belongs to, difficult to properly comprehend in complexity and scale though it may be. His future values naturally do not align fully alongside mine, but he is a man that values the sanctity of a free mind and seeks to protect that freedom for those below him, something I trust and pray that he will continue to do after that horrific debacle..."

Alexandria, you seem to be the living dream of plenty of progressives, in most issues regarding women and minorities. Economically...I'd have expected you cooperating with more taxes though I suppose being monarch already implies some kinda communitarian bond, well, in the wacky symbolic way that I don't see here in North America.

And when I say you're progressive, hoo-boy do I mean it. You Earth Westerners are funny like that! Your belief system just replaced Christian End-of-Times theology and millennialist promises over Paradise with the promises of a better tomorrow on Earth. But it's that same lineal perspective that assumes that things should evolve over time. Well, in my people's experience, progress is subjective...if not materially or qualitatively, then culturally. And erasing your nation's past, that's also iffy, and kinda two-faced if you ask me. Is there really a point in renaming the order from "British Empire" to "British Excellence"...if eeeeeeeeh....British excellence is built on imperial plunder, eh, materially speaking? If anything, doesn't it downplay and omit the dark bits of your peoples' history that made them what they are today giving them less to reflect on, for better or worse? Now, regarding your future: I don't care about who you spend your time with, personally; I think it's nice to have companionship and love...but...is your relationship with another woman really a good long-term path to take, for your institution's sake? I mean, you need a bloodline to carry on and two 1s don't add up to a 3. I guess you could always adopt or re-arrange the monarchy to be elective, if that's in your playbook but, eh, whatever. I'll be attent, you're an interesting monarch."
