Kingston Wall - When Something Old Dies

It's pretty hard to tell the exact spot when these parts change. Sign of superb prog.

Let me give you a list...

Roar

One FUCKING FUCK THEM BASTARDS Direction

Every country song of that year, or most years prior (my dad will murder me for saying this, remind me not to mention it next time I see him)
Everything else Katy Perry did that year
Let It Go, which is actually a decent song but blown out of proportion by 13 year old girls who saw the movie on their first period and fell in love with the damn thing
All of Taylor Swift's material from that year
All the rap from that year (excluding the one that keeps going "Drink" which I can't remember but was actually not bad)

I think that should be good enough.

BUT...some good stuff came out of 2013, yet it's incredibly minor in comparison to the shitstorm:
Black Sabbath's 13 album
Get Lucky
Macklemore (don't judge, he's the only good rap artist at the moment)
The soundtrack to Pacific Rim

Since I don't listen to any of the "shit" you listed there, it wasn't a bad year. Or else I'd say that there's not a single good year in the music industry ever. The amount of good stuff is very slim every single year there has been. Forget the bad stuff, concentrate on good stuff and BOOM, there's no bad years, only good ones. Or judge the goodness of the year based on the bands you like, not the shit you hear on the radio/news/mass media.

Kingston Wall - I'm the King, I'm the Sun

When you define how good a year is in the industry, you look at what you deem good AND what you deem bad. Then you look at how they compare. Just caring about the good stuff is just as bad as only listening to the shit (which I never hear via radio/news/mass media since I avoid the mainstream ones like IS men in Mosul), in my opinion. Only thing is, I only listen to the shit maybe once or twice intentionally.

Alright. Every year is shit. Because bad stuff exceeds good stuff greatly every single year. Case closed, there's no good years.

Why should I waste my time on bad stuff? Why is only caring about good stuff bad? Doesn't make any sense to me.

To use the words of some wise man whose name I don't remember, how do you know what is good if you don't understand the bad?
