"The folly of monarchy - a sad truth indeed. Pitiable fools, living in the blind belief that their lineage, their forefathers, may do all the heavy lifting for them with regards to legitimacy of rule. And there are few places where I have seen it illustrated more poignantly than in this... no, not man. Such a label is far above him. A bloated pig, lounging upon his throne of rotting wood and pitted gold, gorging himself on an empire he has done naught to build. He plies his sad existence on the belief that his blood is what grants him some... inalienable right. Some magical banner by which he may prove his worth, so that he himself must do naught. And perhaps the most onerous truth of all is that to dispel such an illusion, one must typically exert oh so much effort. Cut down guard after guard. Storm the hovel he calls a palace. Drag his fetid bulk from its halls, and cut that wretched, bulging throat before a gathered crowd... those last few moments are, alas, the only surefire way of opening the eyes of a creature such as this. To the simple fact that his blood is... oh, nothing special. In truth, I'd hesitate to call it a worthy snack - to drink from this acrid, drug-addled husk would be most ill-advised, I feel. Away with these scrolls, these words denoting naught but folly and self-ruin. There is little more to be said."

"Hmm... an odd change, but a somewhat welcome one. No further need to pore over descriptors of human swill... and there are elements to this woman I find most intriguing. Though large tracts of the lexicum employed here are all but alien to me, they speak of one who seeks progress. A scholar is worthy of some base respect based on that simple fact - their path is dead-set. And she makes a point of not allowing her work to stand in the way of the peoples' freedoms - though few other views on matters of governance are stated, these suffice to paint a generally positive picture. On a personal level, I've little to add - timidity does not have to be a mark of weakness. Her life is storied, and there is something to be said for one who may hide inner strength behind a withdrawn visage."

"Well, would you look at that. A walking relic, huh? Where capitalism exists 1000 years before modern capitalist theory? It's interesting, that's a given. However, I find his way of runnings thing as oddly... admirable? I do not support militarist regimes like his; but it's pretty hard to consider a merit-based system a bad one. Of course, the way of seeing who is 'worthy' of succeeding him is... barbaric at worst. Also, I fully support his defense of sexuality. You are as much of a person if you're a gal who likes gals, like me, or a dude who likes other dudes. The fact that in such an era where one would think sexual minorities would be worse off there's someone who defends these minorities is breathtaking and a sign that maybe, just maybe, the situation of gays, lesbians and bisexuals in society will be better significantly earlier than in our own timeline."

"What a naive Head of State. Equality for all? That she even believes in this makes a bad first impression. Hierarchy is inevitable and preferable to Anarchy. Tell me, reader—would you prefer a battle commander that could defend your borders as Head of State, or a man with a complex understanding of the law, and who fights to uphold it and thus, the future of your nation, or none at all? Equity is what one should strive for in the fight for Utopia."

"Ah, a fighter pilot! I know his type; I've been on the battlefield with many men just like him. Well, I was mostly patching them up rather than actually flying in one of those dreadful planes, but still, it's nice to encounter a fellow veteran here! Mr. Foulk appears to have been quite the skilled one, too, but I can't be the judge of that since I've never flown anything more advanced than a trainer!"

As for his leadership and politics, well, there's little info I could gather. This bit about him wanting to unite his homeland, ah, a marvelous goal! I do hope that his people don't fall into civil war though, especially since Mr. Foulk's policies apparently involve suppressing nationalism. Hmm, that's not good, I would think. Instead of giving his people the idea of one united country to fight for, Larry is allowing them to develop their own cultural groups and identities which will harm his nation in the long-run. To each their own, I guess.

Overall, my assessment is slightly positive."

You can never really escape them but that does not mean you should not try. The more often you succeed the better.

"Divine Right? Hereditary Constitutional Monarchy? Appalling! I was voted in by the Senate, those who are the most fit to do so, for they are chosen because of their superior education and intelligence! I too have another question: Are you trying to hide that you 'assumed a false identity (associated with some make-up and a scruffy wig) and frequented a pub next to one of Berlin's more desirable universities'? Oh, well, that is irrelevant in face of your Prussian oppression of the Poles and Austrians! It was only because it was attacked on all fronts that the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth fall, and on one front by a coerced power. Therefore, my opinion on Friedrich V is highly negative."
