As one might expect, Joe does not come back to life after he took his own life.

And so, we shift our attention to our new man, Tavish (formal name: Man #983477), a scrumpy-loving, one-eyed Scotsman.

Tavish II becomes a meme star when some recorded footage of his slurred speech goes viral on the internet. The audio clip is later used in a videogame called TF2.

Tavish II is living the life of his dreams, but life is full of surprises, and he's shot in the head by a Ugandan sniper who won a 7.62mm sniper rifle in a bowling raffle. Tavish II's head is reduced to small pieces of ground beef and sausage.

A child who has been starving on the streets for months decides to eat the brain remains of Tavish II because he was so hungry. This child is the new man.

While the child is in jail his legs are broken by the head mafioso for failing to pay a gambling debt. Some years after conviction and learning the prison game he develops an affinity for a new guy, former lawyer, in for the drunken hit and run of a child. They cohabitate for a time and struggle to survive the always brutal but sometimes wonderous adventures that the correctional facility provides.

Bob, after months of trying to get the right stuff in order, finally brings his idea into fruition, which he then proceeds to unwittingly cause a Spacetime Catadlysm Event in his parent universe, and as you might've expected, it's the end of him and every living being in U84572. At least, his original copy.

New Dave (Formal name: Man #92328), a level-headed and down-to earth Spacetime Phenomena Research Division employee working with the Distant Observation Division.
