Soviet Union: "A man of courage, endurance and will... Quite friendly for a radical Redcap (communist), too. I, too, have wondered how lives would be if Zitravia had become a total wasteland instead of just half a wasteland... and he has pointed me to a nightmare. Ah, it's only logical to dream of a utopia, the only coping mechanism for us nowadays. Nothing vehemently wrong with him, only the sheer trauma."

"Comrade Volkov's insistence on "doing it right" with libertarianism and democracy might either accelerate or delay the bright future for which he is striving, like putting bandages over a gunshot, instead of surgically removing the bullet with the use of authority and control over the anguishing state that he rules. Most times, the correct sequence is to remove the bullet, but in some cases removing the bullet might cause more harm than good. So yes, I can see he is keeping the bullet to himself to prevent further bleeding. It will hurt... it will. But will it kill? I am watching that."

"Our medical professionals have informed me that removing a bullet is almost always a terrible idea. Doing so is likely to cause severe bleeding as it is removed, as there is likely chance the bullet is holding a blood vessel closed. The best course of action, they explain, is disinfecting the wound, applying pressure, and bandaging it up with clean fabric, stitching it up if necessary. As I am only alive today thanks to the miracle of human medicine, I am strongly inclined to trust their advice. I hope that the fact that I listen to experts may speak for itself to you, my friend. "Oh, hello there! It would seem that your folk have been hard done by, to be so wary and distrustful. There are few who could be so yet still retain the desire for some degree of cohabitation. Most folks would see that as a virtue, but it can also be a liability in my line of work. In any event... rejoice, friend! Know that there are some out there who would be positively thrilled just to know of your existence, if not driven to tears by mere proximity! Though, if I'm honest I think it's just because their ruling family is just a liiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiittle too fascinated by foxes with multiple tails... food for thought, though."

"An alien infiltrator, I always considered extra spacial civilizations to be enemies of mankind at large, Their wicked goal is to subdue humanity and thus they must be given no quarter, This creature is nothing more than a sentient creation designed to manage covert operations, It seems that the aliens find tactical value in allowing these so-called avatars a semblance of personality which is an intriguing detail"
