No punishment

Over the limit of drugs

Most drugs --alcohol, underarm deodorant, caffeine, nicotine, thc, cocaine, theobromine, etc., are unregulated. Drugs are considered non-criminal in and of themselves, so there is no statutory limit. That being said having a truckload of fentanyl will get you tied up in the legal system for years with the authorities wanting to know what need someone has with that much of the stuff. Criminal use of a drug, or use of a drug to commit a crime usually warrants up to 5 years hard labor per offence. Poisoning someone with a drug is homicide or attempted homicide and can get 20 years hard labor or the death penalty.

Disturbing the peace

Read the Riot Act (literally). Given the chance to return to a peaceable demeanor if no real harm has been done (or harmed party refused to press charges). Taken away to holding for 4-24 hours to "cool down" and subsequently released if no crimes have been committed. All attempts are made to calm a breacher of the peace. If the citizen or officer must arrest a belligerent for defiance in disturbing the peace, possible charges are 1 day to 1 week pay forfeited (garnished over one week to 2 months), one week to one month of community service, or at worst one week to one month in the local jail. Routine, habitative, or professional breachers (of the peace) are considered public nuisances at best (up to 6 months hard labor) and seditionists at worst (up to 5 years hard labor) per offence.

There is no need to say that the victim was someone "special".
"Assassination" is murder, and therefore the death penalty applies.

Death penalty. Selling people regardless of familial relations is viewed as a crime against humanity and is under the nation's definition of slavery.

Public nudity is a cultural norm in its other autonomous territory so people basically just assumed the nudist came from other territory.

Secretly draining every body of water in the nation.

If it's medicine, legal and supported by our national health agency, there's no crime.

Otherwise, it is classified as drug trafficking, including marijuana, and the penalty varies from 10 to 20 years.
