Regarding Antimonos II of Thakia

"Ah, yes, despite looking like a viking straight from the Nordland Division, we have a rare and especial breed of 'liberal reforms and democratic ideals'. What a boring, dull-minded leader completely devoid of any innovation or will to power. Does he get pleasure from being politically castrated? Is he a deviant masochist who couldn't help but pass the Act of Reconciliation? Someone bring to me a leader who rules with vigor, and not a regurgitated show-monarch in wolf's clothes."

"The use of terror tactics is, frankly, useful in wartime. But I wouldn't consider the Arms of the Mechanators to be a prime example of a military figure to be followed by any rational-minded person. Or anyone else. If I commend her, her madness on the frontlines and in general, and her band of crazed maniacs, then I am also insane enough to do such a thing."

If I was to assume that he was elected democratically into office, his voters surely must have had made a huge mistake. Although, to be fair, his ambitions are admittedly far-reaching and plausible but this is overridden by his lack of experience in his field of work"
