I learned that Posadism is named after a person... I'm not gonna lie, I thought it was post-sadism, which, if it were a political ideology, honestly sounds like it would be no different than Posadism itself.

Apparently, Zuamaland is a government-in-exile of Sweden-Norway after the Soviet Union annexed their territory.

Long ago during the breakup of Pangaea, there's a strange loud volcanic explosion takes place what was once Mount Howard began to widen but as time passes, volcanic activity has been spiked in both North American and European tectonic plates caused some more seamounts to raise up above the sea level, while in Escadia, the raising of seamounts had caused Mount Howard island to absorb the remaining islands into what is now known as Escadia.

So the fact that they have quite a handful of things that boosted their economy forward. Not the typical weapons sales, or some bizarre tech. It really does make the Boring but Practical into play nicely because often times, it's the humble industry of instant noodles and sodas - even if a little unhealthy (though I reckon teh FFT should be able to take out the unhealthy elements) - that propels the economy.

I wonder what kind of instant noodle flavours they have.

I've learnt that Damodes Base is either secretly some kind of rogue AI or has a system weakness that makes it vulnerable to co-opting by genocidal actors. Someone impatient with the progress of the war with the Martians decided to activate Damodes Base, apparently carrying the authority to do so but without coordinating with their colleague who seems to have known this would happen. My only confusion is why Damodes Base's fatal flaw was apparently a secret, or at least apparently a secret to the person with the authority to activate Damodes Base. Still, in any case, it's a chilling scene. A superweapon is frightening enough; a rogue superweapon that intentionally fires on civilian targets (the colonies, I assume) is more frightening still.

I learned that Klarissa is, quite literally, "Mother Nature." She is a "personification" of Valentine Z, but that is actually a matter of appointment by Valentijn, rather than a matter of creation or manifestation. Klarissa was thought dead for a long time, but she was actually dormant. (or perhaps in hiding?) When the Valentians mended their world's environment, Klarissa reemerged and identified herself as Mother Nature.

Apparently technology in their world advanced at a much faster pace than in our own, with them being at around modern tech levels in the 1960s. A pity it also came with an apocalyptic war.

AN: Their governmental structure is somewhat byzantine, with numerous political bodies and offices wielding overlapping power and authority. It's a wonder that they're able to get anything done. Also, they were able to develop an AI with videocassette technology, which is certainly an impressive feat.

They are technically three nations, with liberal progressives in the south and a 'freedom loving dictatorship' in the north and the main nation in their midst.

Even though they are located in the mid-pacific, they have tundra.

They have year-round schooling because 'lol kids r dum'.

I'm not entirely certain what I think of all that, really.

Cala is a title, the leader of a Caleshan Tribe, redundantly speaking. It is a fairly meritocratic arrangement as the folk that have the post can have just about be an expert at any useful trade and be exceptionally good at it to maintain the post, which will be held onto without a definite term limit as long as they deliver the desired expectations of their tribe. Their executive decisions are near supreme, over-ridden only by the majority vote of sub-Cala.

The Tohorinese military doctrine is in large part designed to circumvent their well-known physical disadvantage in melee fighting, which had prior resulted in a number of humiliating defeats in both the 6 Years' War in Cuba and a number of colonial campaigns in North Africa (what were they doing in North Africa?)

Germany Russia performed remarkably well in the Third World War against NATO, but their Italian Chinese allies sadly let them down in Greece and North Africa Korea, leading to the victory for NATO and "liberalism" in the world.

Socialist California's military is named 'California People's Army' (why not Californian?). It has an active personnel of 120,000 and an active militia of 300,000 (presumably meaning paramilitary and/or "national defense league" ala what some European countries have). Half its personnel serve in the navy, which is considerably large for a military of that size, equipped with all sort of ships from missile boats and submarines to battleships and aircraft carriers.

Their status as a well-developed ex-colony lies in the fact that their former masters, the Swedish-Norwegian Kingdom, set up a government-in-exile during the 1940s after the Soviet Union took their home. So the White minority was more or less forced to seriously invest in industry and services to keep up with their previous lifestyle.
