It's kinda interesting how the view ratio for different types of threads is. This thread, for like every one post, you get about 3 views. The "What Movie Are You Watching?" one gets about 13 views for every 1 post. It really does depend the type of thread apparently, which makes sense.

I think it's basically because this one's more explicitly abused as an unofficially sanctioned postfarming thread.

Yeah, it really is not necessary to make a new post every time a new song comes on your radio/iPod/CD player/Pandora/whatever you are listening to.

Right, but I don't post in this thread every time I am on NS. I really think it would be a better thread if so much of it wasn't just the same small group of people posting every 3 minutes -- and usually they listen to albums, so you get whole series of posts with the same artist, which means you're not even getting a cross section of people's musical tastes. You're just getting a list of which songs are on that album. I can look the album up on Amazon if I want a track list.

But, but...MUSIC!

I actually don't do that as much anymore. I used to do that more. Though I haven't been posting as much lately period because I just haven't been listening to music. I mainly do posting for every song when I'm listening through something new I haven't listened to before, and otherwise it depends what I'm doing.

TBH I think I subconsciously post in this thread just to give myself something to do while I'm listening. Especially if I'm listening to something new/relatively new to me, I can't play a game or do something else because I want to pay attention to the music. At least with this thread it gives me something to do, but it's not intensive enough for me to become distracted. ☐

There's that, too. I've done this quite a lot. Especially like right now when my brain is crawling and all I'm doing is listening to music while idly staring at my computer.

And yeah, when I'm listening to new stuff, I tend to post it here. I'm not always listening to random different tracks, so I post a whole album. Though I do flip through random songs from random bands a fair amount as well.
