Despite being a communist state, they have a monarchy — and, in their own words, they own “the whole freakin’ (sic) continent.”

Other than their nation name sounding in close resemblance to "cocaine", Kroraine earned its independence in a war for sovereignty.

Only their Eastern provinces enforce mandatory conscription, for whatever reason. Their armed forces also appear to be styled, in naming at the very least, after the legions of ancient Rome.

Because the eastern provinces are recently conquered parts of the middle east, and also boarder the Persians to the East. Things are nowhere near as stable nor as built up as further in like in Anatolia.

Because we are Roman.

And Speak Latin.

Would be rather strange not to have our armed forces be named as expected.

The current dynasty claims descent from the family of Constantine the Great himself, though evidence is sparse.

In the 1800s, Wochaystein had to face Diarcesia in a war. In the end, Wochaystein was defeated, and was incorporated into Diarcesia as a Dieresis.
