There is no single leader, but killing one of them would be treated as any other case of murder. Depending on the state, it could be a life sentence with or without parole or even death penalty.

Theocratic conspiracy against the state?

Depends what action is taken, technically it is not illegal to conspire against the government because of the First Amendment, but if action is taken it can become treason which can lead to the death penalty if necessary.

AN: What? I presume you mean spying on someone, in which case there'd be a fine and/or brief jail time for stalking, depending on the severity. The person being spied on would also be free to press civil charges in a lawsuit and demand a restraining order, which could be anywhere from a few weeks to life.

AAN: On a national level, smoking is forbidden within a short distance of schools and health facilities, and in certain districts and localities is restricted outside of designated small smoking areas, like you'd see at an airport terminal parking lot. If you were to smoke in a smoking area or outside of the nationally-sanctioned zones then there'd be no punishment, but if you were to smoke in an area where it is forbidden federally, district-wide, or locally, then you may find yourself with a decent fine.

Depends on what exactly was going on, if they where pets you'll get fined for any veterinary costs and you might get landed in jail, if it was a feral or stray cat, or if the cat was causing any damage to you or your property (attacking a farmer's chickens, having rabbies, etc.) you might not get charged.

Absolutely nothing. You're not required to obtain a license to manufacture firearms. The Unlimited Right to Manufacture firearms is codified in the 2nd Amendment of the Constitution.

Six months to a year in jail. This could aggravate the penalty depending on what happens during this period when traffic was stopped.

We find owning Pokémon already weird enough, but if your gonna be fully Team Rocket mode, we'd might as well Banish you forever and possibly report you to foreign authorities.

Convincing an entire county that you are a god, creating an entire cult that closes the entire county from outside visitors?

Pokemon that are digitally owned and reported stolen get sent to petty crimes and small claims. A natural pet thief gets a fine and court order to refrain from the area that pet may be found.

Not much our country can do if another nation, although many of our citizens would feel called to the mission field to set them straight. Those who try to create such a cult in Narland would be remanded to a psychiatric institution for delusions of grandeur and remanded to a sanitarium until condition improves.

Obstructing traffic with 6 likeminded others who believe that we must free all the pokemon into reality or face oblivion.
