This is an old cliché but players who would complain about how 'This issue option resulted in X effect to my nation's stats, but NSindex said it would have Y effect!'

Context, for anyone who doesn't know what the Hell I'm talking about: NSindex was a NationStates wiki that, on its issue articles, used to show what stats would get an increase and what stats would get a decrease for each option in the issue. But, while most long-time players know that issue effects will affect each nation differently, newer players didn't, so they thought that this info was 100% a guarantee that 'Yes you will get a higher lifespan when you choose option 3 on issue 420' or whatever. I think at first they opted to put a disclaimer about how the issue effects were only for reference purposes and there's no guarantee that your nation will have the same stat increases or decreases but when people still complained about how 'BUT NSINDEX SAID' (despite statements by mods and other players that NSindex isn't an official source), they just decided to remove them completely. And then later on NSindex, while still up, closed to editing indefinitely due to the owner's health issues.

I mean maybe people still do that with Trotterdam's NS Issue Results page IDK but I definitely remember it being a thing when NSindex was popular.

Honestly? Not really, there's only three other NS wikis that exist and of the three:

1. NSWiki is completely unusable since it's been literally impossible to login to the site for at least a year now.

2. IiWiki is active and usable but it's an entirely IC-wiki, so if you want something like NSindex where it has both IC articles about player's nations, leaders, military, etc. and OOC articles about NationStates as a website, the forums, major events in the game's history, etc., you're SOL here

3. WikiStates is active and usable but there are no active admins, so unless someone catches it, any vandalism will stay (case in point: after Katzenstaat was first made DOS, they vandalised a bunch of pages on the wiki to claim that 'This nation was annexed by Katzenstaat' and, if you check their contributions page here, you'll notice how quite a bit of their vandalism still exists because no one noticed it and no one has bothered to remove it). Also because there are no active admins, page quality can vary wildly and what OOC pages they do have are very basic ones.

(There are technically other NationStates wikis than those three but they're either nation-specific wikis [like my wiki about Gandoor] or region-specific ones and not full-on wikis for all of NS to use)

"Scariest thing" thread replies to FT nations that are just "They have spaceships" and nothing else.

Posts in the "YNs soldiers fighting the ANs" that are just:

They were pathetic weaklings. We beat the shit out of them.

I'll admit I did this one for a bit before I realized that "fighting" does not have to involve an actual war.

our current leader Sorokin was a military officer during World War III but his military record was average. however, during our early history there was a commander in charge of the entire country and he had an excellent military record. too bad he couldn't govern the entirety of Russia properly and so martial law only lasted around 3 years

Bonus points if said "military records" happens to be a lengthy account of brilliant strategic decision-making or incredible showing of bravery. I mean, this things do happen with some IRL leaders, so idk.

more bonus points if they don't become another Ulysses S. Grant (who was a brilliant general but wasn't a great US president, but he was a good one)

To be fair this does happen from time to time, but usually through coups in underdeveloped countries where the warlord colonel declared himself or his cronies general (as opposed to strictly through military achievement.)

Or you pull a Gaddafi and make whatever rank you hold the highest rank in the military so nobody can outrank you. During the Gaddafi era the Libyan military did not have a rank higher than colonel so that nobody could hold a higher rank than Gaddafi.

WA Delegates not being active that much and if they are active not posting on the RMB often. I feel like it would really boost their popularity if they did that.
