I think there might just be multidimensional Habsburgs out and about, because Edgar looks rather like a certain Phoenician...

Despite the radically different structure of this world's history, there was still a first and a second world war, and a following cold war. I'm curious as to know who the major players were, since as far as I can tell the Americas are currently a balkanized backwater.

Apparently, the Ghesites are in a bad situation, due to the fact that empires from the south and north are literally converging on them and they're about to literal fucking monkey on the Ghesites if they're caught, but they're trying to make the best of it by going uber monkey in one blaze of glory, just like the GLA.

BETA stands for "Beings of Extra Terrestrial origin which is Adversary of human race." Apparently originating from Mars, they invaded Earth in the 1970s for all of its resources. They come in many shapes and sizes, from warriors and soldiers that are slightly taller than the average human to building-sized creatures that can fire lasers from their eyes or attack with massive acidic tentacles.

Despite it being a "German" country, most of it's territory is outside of the German heartland. They have territory in Eastern Europe, Russia and Scandinavia, but only control areas of erstwhile Prussia in the German-speaking regions.

For one thing, I learned that "folkwealdery" doesn't always replace "democracy" despite being its linguistic counterpart. It seems like "democracy" is mostly used for formal ideological names ("Democratish Socialism" instead of "Folkwealdy Socialism"), while "folkwealdery" is for pretty much everything else. I also learned that Gilan had a period of independence as a socialist republic prior to its current iteration, hence its currently being known as the "Twithe Republic", which was established as the First World War was ongoing by a working-class movement led by Mirza Kuchak Khan, eventually with the backing of the Russian Red Army, in response to landowners plundering the country. During its existence as the First Republic, it provided considerable assistance to Iran in the form of food aid during a famine as well as retaking Iranian territories that Russia had previously conquered. Despite its attempts at pleasing the Iranian state, though, the First Republic was eventually overthrown by the Iranian army and made a province of Iran.

Despite being generally referred to as "short swords" instead of "knives" because of their length, the way Ghesites use blades in combat is very much along the lines of knife fighting, taking place at very close ranges in only desperate situations and combining the blade itself with hand-to-hand techniques such as wrestling. It completely goes against the way Ghesites are used to fighting, which is precisely why it's so important to them, since its role is as a last resort when their standard methods can't be used.

They are an extremely industrialized and efficiency based nation. The people are not "born" in the conventional sense. Instead they have a gene banks, in which embryos are grown in separate chambers that determine the individual's class and role when they are born.

The Palmeran military operates Panhard AML-60s, not as scout cars but rather as portable mortar vehicles. That's interesting; I've never read about AML-60s being used as anything but light anti-infantry vehicles. I guess my research was lacking in that regard.

In this light, the clouds are a sort of holy "script", each individual cloud a "letter" that forms a command, a warning, and even on rare cases a blessing or a sign of the Mother's favor.

I have learnt that the Ghesites see clouds as a form of script, either of commands or of blessings of their goddess, mostly interpreted by a priest ~~who's reliability and incorruptibility I can totally believe in.~~ I don't think the Ghesites do have a developed system of writing at this point of time, so, it's interesting to think how they interpreted these. As in, through their shapes, or speed, or something else.

As opposed to the real life where the Dutch found the Cape and colonized it primarily to have a port in the most important region connecting the Atlantic and the East Indies, this timeline it was the French who colonized the Cape, primarily Huguenots fleeing French persecution.
