Forced Assimilation,
Gunboat Diplomacy,
Ultrationalism,
Democratization of Fear,
Biased State-Controlled Media.

Those are just a select few from the many more Undesirable and Inhumane preferences and policies that can eventually turn a population into nothing more than mindless un-intelligent organic automatons.

I am utterly dissatisfied in your way of reign and governance, i'd rather not meet you in person.

And also that clothing of yours will turn on the attention of more depraved thoughts in other people's imaginations.."

"I can't say that his idealism burns nearly as bright as he might imagine- while it might serve as a good guidance post for his subjects, that he himself subscribes to such mad theories as mob rule and pacifist drooling suggests some ulterior cause... Perhaps he is subject to some maligned humors, in need of a proper leeching?... I jest, of course. Such medical theories are hundreds of years and thousands of miles removed from my own- I believe, currently, we're in the midst of a fad of urine amongst the medical community, though I think it's quite understandable if I'm unable to stay completely up to date with the goings on of those... well, anyway, that's a bit off topic from you, is it not? Though... both you and my poor, misunderstanding doctors do have some more fortunate traits in common- you both seek to help people, though you're both similarly misguided in diagnosis and execution; you seek to denounce those who you see as improperly practicing your trade- though, it is my belief, that doing so only makes yourselves look more foolish-; and, of course, you both seem to prescribe good moral behavior as a solution to the body's many issues. So, what do I have to say on you, Your Majesty? I can't say I admire you, but I also won't go so far as to completely denounce you, as there's clearly some- misplaced, I'd say- enthusiasm for goodness as right, moral, character. So... I don't know, I suppose he's fine, generally, though I don't particularly care for him regardless."

"Reading this 'canon' version of Bassaine's story, my opinion of her can be summarized. I do not know about this Euphrosyne but from what I have read from the canon, she and Bassaine were former friends until the latter betrayed her. But this is not without reason when Euphrosyne committed patricide. Murder is terrible, murdering a parent is abominable. Good on Bassaine to take action after disposing Euphrosyne. But as much as I would rather see a drastic change in leadership in a country under an unfair ruler, knowing Bassaine's closeness with Euphrosyne makes this tale rather tragic."

He does not seem a lonely man, yet he makes machines to tend to his needs...I shouldn't think too much about this, I am not here to mope. He claims to be a conservative, a term I struggle to understand. But Kyoki Chudoku is not a land of tradition and progress, but of differing degrees of order and oppression. If his beliefs on marriage are influenced by religion, I can understand them...delusions are a dangerous thing, after all. No, no, I should not care about such things, but...disloyalty is vile, but to prevent one from abandoning a sinking ship? Arguable. I do not despise him, but I...cannot say we would certainly get along, even if we have certain similarities."

"For someone taking on a generally malevolent position, Emperor Akatora has proven to be a remarkably benevolent figure. Though his unexpected ascension to power might have paralyzed a lesser man, he was able to quickly unite his realm - through threat of force, I am aware, but this was during the feudal era, and even now not all politics is peaceful - and work to make it a much more livable place for its inhabitants. At risk of repeating myself, it is truly remarkable how he has sought to make a realm of punishment into an "alternative surface world," to use his words. I will not fault his imperialistic tendencies - again, I cannot and will not expect a figure existing five hundred years ago to have a pacifistic foreign policy - and in fact I admire his care for civilian and otherwise innocent life, even during his military campaigns. Though it is not a surprising stance given that he has lost his human nature, I applaud his support for supernatural beings being granted the same rights as humans. Overall the Dragon Emperor is a positive figure in my book and I would be open to meeting with him."

"Mai Chie is already off to a good start being another one who strives for peace. It seems to be quite the rarity around this universe, but when I do encounter one, i have to admit it is very refreshing. While she is still much younger in comparison to myself, she does hold a wealth of knowledge and experience already. Like me, she has a wariness of outsiders, which is totally understandable considering what I have previously mentioned when it comes to the peaceful types being a rarity. Though hers is more specifically towards humans, but while Platinia is a nation of humans, they are not ruled by one. Perhaps we could come to some sort of mutual agreement that would benefit us both when it comes to the protection of both our peoples. I also strongly commend her stance against environmental destruction, being one myself who is devoted to its protection. Lastly, it is a shame that she is stuck in her own island due to her connection with her deity. I do not envy her in the slightest for that, as I deeply value my freedom of movement, especially since the Omniverse is open for me to explore. I guess if interactions were to happen, looks like the visits will be one-sided, but the quest of Solveme in the slightest. My opinion of the High Priestess is positive.

"If I'm not mistaken, their leader...fell from a navy ship during war and was magically transported several decades into the future while also becoming immortal? Well, it's not the strangest thing I've read, considering there was this Chairwoman from another universe who apparently also became immortal following a series of incidents. But I digress, my review here is on Mr. Kanoye.

I don't really find Kanoye to be the most effective leader of his nation. He could have far more impact to push forward his preferred policies if only he was willing to participate actively instead of reducing himself to a mere figurehead. Rather unfortunate, given that his actual ideals don't seem too terrible- for a liberal anyway. Pacifism, more government regulation, and social equality is something I can support."

I will do my best not to reflect upon myself, but it is difficult to speak of her without being reminded of the present...distress of our nation. She is a monarch, but the kind of monarch who seems to want nothing more than to gradually lose power to those below her. Perhaps this is better than clinging desperately to any chance at greater personal influence, but I cannot condone allowing such future division. I fear she will leave a legacy of chaos in her wake. But then, even a tyrant can manage that...forgive me, I promised not to do that. Perhaps my next worry is pedantic, but...fortune telling? It is not something I see as a good quality in a leader, to care so much for the whims of fate. I was always told that fate is an illusion, and I believe that the waves move not in destined unison, but by the wind alone...if I may be metaphorical. I do not have contempt for the Empress, but neither do I feel she will leave a legacy I can condone. If one's legacy can ever be left up to themselves..."

In the course of history, sometimes great people arise to achieve great things, with noble motives and the best of intentions housed in a courageous heart. These people, no matter their background, beliefs, or position, are to be respected. Then there are the poseurs. The wastes of oxygen, those sickening cockroaches who think that their weak egos and meagre accomplishments are worthy of respect. Sawagi quite firmly occupies the latter category, a reactionary sow of a girl if there ever was one. She is mentally weak and still has a sycophantic complex for the fool who 'saved' her from the only good decision this utterly useless scrap would've made. Standing as a military dictator, guardian of a dying system, all to live up to some putrid, rotten, old-world ideals... it's a fucking travesty, that's what it is.

In short, I think it's fair to say I express the most strong contempt.
